is vital to bride's comfort

Today's bride is less concerned with the symbolism of old shoes than with the new shoes she will be wearing. Many a bride has wished that she was in someone else's shoes — her feet were killing her.

From the minute she starts up the aisle until the time she leaves for her honeymoon the bride has little opportunity to sit down, so she should select bridal shoes as carefully as her wedding gown.

Traditionally her shoes are white or ivory to match her gown. If she wears a delicately tinted blue or pink dress the shoes are often dyed to match. Even a bride does not look beautiful if her face reflects the ache of lined feet. Since the lowered heel has become high fashion, however, no bride has to suffer down the aisle on spiky heels. A wise choice for a wedding shoe is a simple mid-heel pump of soft leather with a flexible leather sole. Leather molds to the shape of the foot and gives good support. Leathers lined also help keep feet cool and dry on the warmest days.

The year celloshins, kids and luster leathers are interpreted in slim pumps with tapered or crescent toes and curved slender heels. High heels are featured, of course, and the bride may choose to wear them if she wishes.
