THE HAPPIEST HEART.

Who drives the horses of the sun Shall lord it but a day; Better lowly the deed were done, And keep the busy way.

The rust will find the sword of fame, The dust will hide the crown; Ay, none shall call so high his name Time will not tear it down.

The happiest heart that ever beat Was in some quiet street That found the common daylight sweet And left to heaven the rest.

JOHN VANCE CHENEY. HIS HEARING WAS RESTORED.

But for Some Time After He Couldn't Hear the Ticking of a Watch.

A well-known physician recently told the following story to an Indianapolis Social reporter. The gentleman mentioned was a farmer who had been deaf for many years.

He came to my office and made signs that he wanted his ears examined. I examined them and in an instant almost found that his defective hearing was caused by the gathering of a waxy substance in his ears.

When I removed this obstruction of the hearing I was surprised at the result. The gentleman jumped from the chair where he had been seated and put both hands to his ears. He couldn't stand the noise from the street and the sound startled him.

He was one of the most pleased men I ever saw. He went away and it was several weeks before he came again. He called at my office with his wife and she did all the talking. She hardly raised her voice above a whisper and every now and then she looked at her husband in a timid way.

She said that for several days he would not allow the least bit of noise in the house and that he had buttered some things before their time account of being affected by their squeal. His daughter and her husband had lived with them for two years and they had to leave on account of the crying of their 6-month-old baby.

There were two clocks in the house, one in the dining room and one in the bedroom. They stopped on account of their ticking. The clock in the bedroom was an alarm clock. It went off one night. He jumped from bed and nearly broke his neck by falling head first on the floor.

The woman said that she had to keep the house as quiet as a graveyard for more than two weeks, as it was that long before her husband became accustomed to hearing. His daughter, however, has gone back to the farm with her baby, and the clocks have been started again.

Milk Made From Wood pulp. At Bradford, England, a clock has been made from wood pulp so much like the real thing that it bids fair to occupy a place in commerce and use.

It is produced by subjecting vegetable fiber to the action of various acids, the result being a product said to be identical with the filament of the worm, having its lightness and softness and its qualities, including that of durability. Commercially speaking, the importance of the discovery can hardly be overestimated, as it is possible that it will produce the most revolutionary consequences in the trade in that commodity everywhere.

The world's stock of silk, both woven and raw, is immense and has always held a staple value likely to be much shaken and disturbed by the introduction of an article which can be cheaply and abundantly produced. Samples of yarn, fringe, braid, gimps, sewing silks, handkerchiefs, brocades and other fabrics, dyed in various colors, have been exhibited by the Bradford makers to the trade and pronounced all right and up to the commercial standard in all respects.

Their conquests and settlement of Britain, of part of Gaul and other countries, of their expeditions and invasions, of their sea power, have been attributed to another people—the so-called Saxons of the Romans, then to the Angles.

People about "We belong to the glorious Anglo-Saxon race," when they are in a party of historical facts backed by monuments to prove their assertions. On the contrary, as it will be seen, the monuments of the Anglo-Saxons are found in England and called Saxons or Anglo-Saxon graves or in France Frankish graves and thoroughly Norse in origin as well as their contents.

Taking Time by the Forelock. A clerk in the war department went out one morning for lodgings the other day and called at a nice looking house on Eleventh street in the window of which was a placard: "Rooms for Rent. The landlord showed him a large front room, the rental for which, she stated, was $16 a month.

"That is more than I can afford to pay," said the clerk.

"Well," responded the landlady, apologetically, "would you object to occupying a room in which a lady had died?"

"No," replied the clerk, "I guess not. What caused the death?"

"Consumption," said the landlady.

"That is not a contagious disease. How long since the lady died?"

"Why, she isn't dead yet, but it is only a question of a few days. Can't I engage the room to you?"—Washington Post.

Curing Frost Bite by Electricity. Although the past winter has in most places been of exceptional mildness, it has developed a new cure for frost bites. Dr. Helting has been successful in Germany in twenty cases in healing people of the frozen nose. The treatment consisted in applying electrodes to the opposite side of the nose, and passing a moderately strong current for about five or ten minutes, moving the electrodes about. The immediate result is a reddening of the tissues, which may last several days, after which the skin and flesh resume their normal condition. In extreme cases from ten to fifteen applications have been found necessary.

Two Assassinations. Build the more you read, O my soul, As the swift seasons roll; Leave thy low-vaulted past; Let each new temple, nobler than the last, Till thou at length art free, Leaving this outward shell by life's unsetting sea.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

THE LITTLE MOTHER.

And Some of the Amusing Things She Does. It is very amusing to notice the maternal air of a girl of four or five summers who will assume toward another of two years. In the narrowest part of the city lives a little girl named Annie, who puts on such a maternal look when taking care of a neighbor's baby that everybody has to laugh.

Annie's chief weakness was an unconscious yearning to spoil this baby. She was crowding his little inside with cake the other day when his mother came upon the scene.

"Don't give Helen any more cake," said the mother, "I'm afraid it will make her sick."

Notwithstanding this request, Annie thought she knew better, and went in the house for more cake.

A moment or two afterward Helen's mother discovered her child still swallowing cake.

"Annie, didn't I tell you not to give her any more cake? I'll take her in the house if I see you give her another crumb."

So Annie kept the rest of the cake to herself. Little Helen stuck up her mouth invitingly and it almost broke Annie's heart to refuse to feed her.

"Helen, don't get it, it's not getting it, burst into tears.

Then Annie took her in the arms and said: "Never mind, Helen. I'll be your mother. You come with me. You can have all the cake you want. And if the mother had stepped in with a slipper the two might have wandered away to start housekeeping far from her away."

All Alike. "I've let my play run go," said a reader. "I paid him $4,000 a year to manage the club, but he has lost it all."

He had gained enough information to write a play for himself. I suppose that with the points he has picked up by effort will be his only success, but more play readers for me, if you please. They do not pay. I have had several plays read, and I know where I speak. One of them would come down to the office at ten o'clock, read a play in an hour or so and go out and get drunk. Then he would come back and scold me, and then he would tear passion to shreds and throw literary physic to the dogs. Oh, they are all alike and this is why I've got the door locked."

A Change of Sex. The novelist of the future will have to change the sex of the old Scotch gardener who pines around in the conservatory, who lates to have his choice brooms plucked, and who utters words of wisdom in quaint dialect to the members of the family.

No one even gardeners of the profession, which would seem to be men's by inheritance since the days "when Adam delved and Eve span" is left to men. Lady G. is training an entire staff of women to take charge of the fine grounds on her extensive estate in York. Miss Wilkinson, an English woman, has recently been complimented by royalty on her landscape gardening at Vauxhall Park, which has just been opened by the Prince of Wales.

No Boarders in the Palace. One of the lords of Hampton Court palace recently undertook to increase her income by taking boarders. The lord chamberlain was therefore obliged to point out that while rooms at Hampton court may be temporarily let with the queen's consent, and there is no objection to relatives or friends contributing to the expenses of the ladies while on a bona fide visit, the queen draws a line at attempts to make pecuniary profit out of her hospitality.

Vitality of Disease Germs. As an evidence of the phenomenal vitality of disease germs, Dr. Koch, of Germany, and Dr. Ernst and Compter, of England, declare that the blood of animals and men, dying of contagion may be dried and kept for years, and that they will retain the power of the class of infections to which they belong; this even after having been pulverized in a mortar and subjected to the lowest degree of natural and artificial cold.

A Bit of the Autocrat's Wit. Everyone probably has heard the story that when James T. Fields invented the name of Manchester by the Sea and sent a note dated from there to Dr. Holmes, the poet replied in a note dated "Beverly-by-the-Depot." It is said that Whitbread, egged on by some of his friends, also wrote one dated "Danvers-among-the-Hollyhocks."—Boston Transcript.

Water and Sediment. It has been estimated by competent civil engineers that the Mississippi river annually discharges 12,000,000,000 cubic feet of water into the Gulf of Mexico. Of this prodigious quantity the 1,000th part is sediment. Thus it will be seen that in Mississippi an amount of mud is thrown in the Gulf to cover a square mile of surface to a depth of 340 feet.

He Was a Cobbler. Stambouloff, the Bulgarian ex-minister, was in his younger days a cobbler, and a cobbler. On becoming prime minister he appointed his former master, the cobbler, prefect of police at Sofia as a mark of respect for his just and unerring severity and his remarkable talent for dogging.

A Notice. "I thought I had me man," said the detective. "But it didn't take him long to convince me that he had never been here before."

"How did he do it?" "Unconsciously. He asked me where he could get a drink on Sunday."

A Scottish Estate. Lord Breadalbane is credited with owning the most magnificent estate in Scotland. His lordship can ride 100 miles west from Taymouth Park to Ardmaddy castle, on the Argyshire coast, without setting foot off his possessions.

Glass for Fire Screens. A new glass for fire screens, invented by Herr R. Zeigmond by adding terro-salts to ordinary glass. It is claimed that the absorption of heat rays is very largely increased, without affecting the transparency to light rays.

Question for Question. Some rude speeches merit rude answers. "Are you the waiter?" asked an over-dressed woman of a guest at an evening party recently.

"No," replied the man, "I am not; are you the chambermaid?"

Sent to an Asylum. Mrs. Fanny Chin, the famous colored singer, who toured Europe a few years ago, has been sent to an insane asylum from alcoholism. She was on the verge of delirium tremens when arrested.

The best is Pond's Extract, because it is the strongest, purest and most uniform article made. Note bottles with buff wrap-pers.
