Unoccupied Home Entered, Articles Taken

GEORGETOWN — It was discovered here yesterday morning that the unoccupied home of Mrs. H.W. MacDonald on Water Street had been forcibly entered, apparently the night before.

Neighbors noticed blinds were drawn on the house windows, and thought this unusual as they had been left up when Mrs. MacDonald left in the fall to live in Charlottetown for the winter.

Investigation proved that the front door had been forced open, and it is reported that along with damage done to the refrigerator, a number of household articles were missing.

Georgetown town police and the Montague detachment of the RCMP are investigating.

by Dr. Mason, was a rise in the ocean floor on the ridge of the valley to within 400 fathoms—less than half a mile—from the surface. Twelve miles away, the floor drops to 1,300 fathoms, almost two miles. These extremes were not previously known.

Another "invaluable" aid in the work, Dr. Loncarovic said, was an automatic radar plotting device, actually designed for navigational purposes. This enabled the weaving, criss-crossing survey ship to keep her bearings in relation to anchored marker buoys, without taking "fixes" at regular intervals.

Weather which at first forced a shuffling of schedules, broke perfectly to allow successful completion of all three tasks set for the trip, Dr. Mason said. These were the channel and mid-ocean surveys and another on the "steam across" from Bristol.

While in England, there was an "exchange of scientists" between the Hudson and the Discovery, a ship of the British National Institute of Oceanography, Dr. Loncarovic said.

British researchers were amazed at the Hudson's equipment because "no body thought Canada had such facilities. We didn't realize what we had ourselves, really, until someone else said it. We can do anything with this ship."

Dr. Mason and Dr. Loncarovic are graduates of the University of Cambridge and both have worked on the Discovery during previous charting missions.

The Hudson was expected to be tied up until about mid-May, when a two-week cruise is scheduled.

First Herring Catch Made; Boats Ready For Lobsters

GEORGETOWN — The first catch of spring herring at Georgetown was made by Glen Llewellyn, 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Llewellyn, who set his net and made his first catch on Tuesday.

On Wednesday he also landed more of the much-sought-after spring herring. Although the quantities landed to date are relatively small it is hoped that the catches will continue to increase.

At one time local fishermen owned hundreds of herring nets and landed large quantities of herring, enough to supply their needs as lobster bait and at times quantities were exported from here to other Island fishing communities for lobster bait.

In recent years the herring run at Georgetown has fallen off to a marked degree and today not many fishermen have nets but purchase their lobster bait from schooners which bring the bait in from the Magdalen Islands or from trucks that transport the bait from New Brunswick. This method, although assuring a supply had added considerably to the expenses of the lobster fishermen.

The announced postponement of the opening of the lobster fishing season from May 1 to May 8 has given fishermen an extra week to make ready their boats and equipment. The wharves in Georgetown are now piled high with lobster traps and the waterfront presents a scene of feverish activity as everything is being made ready for the opening of the season.

Although the harbor is ice free, there still remains some ice in the Bradwell and Montague rivers, which, as it moves out, presents a hazard to herring nets set in the harbor. Outside the mouth of the harbor there is still considerable ice in the gulf which it is hoped will move far enough off shore before opening.
