Where is the Toady?

THERE is in Prince Edward Island no community more independent or outspoken than Souris, the people of which the Patriot tries to brand as "toadies." There are few more intelligent and respectable men than the man whose name is subscribed to the address. It is not necessary, therefore, that we should offer any defence of those who have been so grossly insulted, for the insult will inevitably revert to those who gave it.

Bossism—The Situation in the States.

A WRITER in "Scribner's Monthly" for August makes a slashing attack upon Bossism, as developed in the political machinery of the United States. He says "it is equally astonishing and instructive to see how hard Bossism dies; and, referring to the Conkling embroglio, says:

Mr. Conkling, though less gross and less corrupt in his methods, has been never a political leader, but always essentially a "boss." He has never deserved any higher or better name than this, and his reputation as a man of great political power is as unreal a thing as ever existed in the realms of myth and moonshine. He has never been a man of ideas. He has shown a good deal of skill in manipulating the machinery of politics, in managing appointments to office, in working up the details of a campaign; but he has never led the people in political ideas, or taught them anything.

By force of a strong will and an aggressive self-conceit, he has managed to make a good many time-serving people afraid of him, and to keep up his power with them, but he is not, nor never was, anything better or bigger than a political boss. His ideas of himself and the people were well illustrated in the resignation of his office as senator. He had never been in the habit of leading; he was a boss—a drover. He undertook, at Chicago, to compel the Republican party to take General Grant for their candidate. The party would not be driven and he was defeated. It was a question at first whether he would support the nominee, for the people were entirely uncertain whether he cared more for his own personal will than for his party. Then, when the newly elected President nominated a man very offensive to him to an office that formed an important part of his machinery as a political boss, he undertook to coerce the Senate into rejecting the nomination. When he found that he could not do this, and that the President could not be coerced into withdrawing it, he threw up his hands and resigned, leaving the Senate in the power of his political enemies, and compelled his colleagues to do the same, thereby raising himself politically forever, and came home to drag his followers into re-electing him. Events have proved what most people apprehended at first, that no political man ever made a more stupid blunder. He is not only out of office, but out of power as a political boss. The event shows also that the days of "bossism" are closing. It is an institution that can hardly survive an intelligent agitation of the subject of Civil Service Reform. The people are becoming tired of being used simply as machinery for the elevation of a pack of selfish and mercenary office holders.

It is equally astonishing and instructive to see how hard bossism dies, and to witness the hold in its dying moments; it managed to maintain upon its serfs and slaves. When Robertson was nominated for collector for the port of New York, the legislature of the State, of which he was a much-esteemed member, immediately indorsed the nomination as one most fit to be made. Mr. Conkling came back to this legislature to be re-elected, on this very issue between himself and the administration. The President made the appointment, the legislature immediately indorsed it; Mr. Conkling opposed it, got angry with the Senate, resigned, and came back to the legislature to be returned, as an indorsement of his fight with the President and the Senate. That he could find thirty men who were ready, at his bidding, to swallow their own words, and humiliate themselves before the State and the nation by voting for his reelection, shows how great his power was. Nay, more than this: that he could secure the Vice-President of the United States in leaving his high seat, and ignoring the deencies and proprieties of his position, and going to Albany to assist in sending back to Washington a couple of renegades to fight the head of an administration of which himself was an important member—demonstrates the mischievous hold which bossism had given Mr. Conkling upon all whom he held to be his debtors. We suppose it is true that Mr. Arthur was nominated to the Vice-Presidency at Chicago in order to conciliate Mr. Conkling. It is probably true, that in consequence of this concession, Mr. Conkling assisted in the campaign, and that directly and indirectly, Mr. Arthur owes his election to the boss. But how malign must be the power that would compel a man of ordinary sensibilities in the Vice-President's position to turn his back on the President, offend the public sentiment of his own State, trample upon the good-will of the body over which he presides, still stinging with the insult offered it by the retiring senators, and mingle in the canvass instituted to save his political death. Nothing more indecent than this performance stains the annals of party warfare in the United States. Let us hope that any institution which is capable of producing so foul a birth as this is forever dead. With Conkling, his resignation was a case of actual political suicide. With Arthur, it is a case of indecency, for which it will take years of honest services to atone. For one it is defeat; for the other, shame and voluntary humiliation.

THE weather for the past three days has been most unseasonable. There must have been another "conjunction."

MR. BLAKE is to be accompanied to this Island by Mr. Huntington and Mr. Anglin. It is suggested that the latter is coming to make sure that the former does not repeat his "disturbing" Argonaut speech. Whatever his notion, Mr. Anglin is an able man, and we shall be glad to see him.

CORRESPONDENCE.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions or statements of our correspondents.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR—Every man of liberal principles and generous sentiments feels glad at heart for the sake of coming. Your esteemed paper of last evening shows that an Address of Welcome is in course of preparation. This is good. But in my opinion the draft published lacks "padding." There is nothing in it about the glorious aims of our statesman. It contains not a word about his proposal to advance the cause of public and individual liberty by means of "compulsory voting," not a syllable to show that we duly appreciate his highly important scheme concerning the representation of minorities; not even the most distant hint about his sublime idea of Federating the British Empire; nothing whatever of all the other glorious reforms our transcendent statesman has in view. Sir, it will not do. These are grave omissions. Let them be supplied.

There are also faults in the form and language of the Draft Address. I object to calling any man, however great and good, a "Seraphic Being." Mr. Blake, it is true, is not an ordinary man; and he should not be addressed by an ordinary title. Let me suggest. How would "Sublime Biped" do? or "Transcendent Sir"? or to make it more euphonious, "Most Illustrious Leader of Mankind"?

Again, I think the reference to "Tory maligning" should be eliminated. It is not true; and nothing that is not absolutely true should appear in an address. Besides, it is not in keeping with the elevated style which should dignify an address to such a very superior man. I am quite sure that, if left in, it will grate very harshly upon Mr. Blake's sensitive ear, irritate him beyond measure, and perhaps drive him to desperation. I hope it will be struck out, and something Tennysonian inserted. Mr. Blake is a great lover of Tennyson, and I feel sure it will please him to hear that the fact is known, even here. The reference to "Aurora" is, I presume, in delicate allusion to the greatest achievement of Mr. Blake's great political career, viz.—the "Aurora Speech." That is good! Yes, that is good!

Kindly convey my regards and suggestions to the Committee who have this important matter in hand, and believe me, Your admirer and friend,

July 22, 1881.

Immediately on receipt of this letter, it was forwarded to the Committee. The Chairman now bids us assure our correspondent that it has received their careful and favorable consideration. They could not however agree to change the title of "Seraphic Being" for either of those suggested. They submit the following:

REVISED DRAFT ADDRESS.

(STILL OPEN TO REVISION.)

The Honorable Edward Blake, Q. C., Leader of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, etc., etc.

SERAPHIC BEING.—At a time when Canada is entering upon an era of unexampled prosperity (vide Toronto Globe), we hail with joy your advent in the eastern sky. Your coming is, indeed, contemporaneous with the aurora of better times and the ushering in of "nobler forms of life—with sweeter manners, purer laws," and we, therefore, welcome you as our "lucky star."

Though necessarily placed at an unapproachable distance from you, we have carefully observed your brilliant career in the western heavens. When, dark clouds looming upon the political horizon, you became a dis-olving view, we have wondered; and we have stood dazzled and "amazed" with the stronger light by which you eclipsed "the self-made man."

The measure you have proposed with a view of compelling electors to go to the polls or to jail, is consistent with the principles of modern liberalism, and is, in our opinion, second in importance only to that by which you intend to secure the representation of minorities. The people of this Province must often necessarily be in the minority; and when our interests are opposed to those of the people of larger Province, we think we should prevail. This measure of yours, is, therefore, in our opinion, one of the very highest importance.

We fully appreciate the magnitude of the Great work you have taken in hand—the Federation of the British Empire. There can be no doubt, whatever, that you will prove entirely successful.

In conclusion, permit us to express, with reverence, our hope and belief that your political career will in the future, as in the past, be like that of a bird dis-caged.—

"In ever highering eagle circles up."

We have the honor to be, etc., etc.,

Hot and Dry.

HIGH TEMPERATURES AND LACK OF WATER IN PARIS AND LONDON.

Paris, July 19.—The intense heat continues. There are loud complaints of bad smells, and fears of sickness are expressed. The Prefect of the Seine yesterday issued a public notice that if people were not less wasteful of the water supply it would be exhausted. It has already been found necessary to discontinue watering the streets, but private houses make the hot weather a reason for reckless waste. There is water enough for daily use at present, but unless families aid in preventing waste the Administration may be compelled to take restrictive measures.

Something like a panic was caused by the announcement recently that in consequence of the hot weather the water supply of Paris was running short. At best it is utterly inadequate to the wants of the population, and drought would be quickly followed by a rapid rise in the death rate.

LONDON, July 16.—The weather continues dry and hot, but the heat is not so excessive as last week. The "Morning Post" calls attention to Pall Mall and Regent streets, which are choked with dust. Water carts, so active when needful, have altogether disappeared. The excuse is the scarcity of water. The "Post" advises pumping water out of the Thames. Several private citizens and representatives of business firms complained at the Police Court yesterday against the water companies for shortening or cutting of the supply. The Magistrate advised summonses against the companies, which were heavily liable, and summonses were taken accordingly.

The nailmakers' strike in Staffordshire, by which 30,000 operatives were thrown out of work, has ended by the masters conceding the 30 per cent advance demanded by the strikers.

LINNS.

Suggested by the death of Miss Ella J. Mutton, Lower Montague, who died May 30th, 1881.

A maiden wooed to be a wife I saw one summer day, Watching the running stream of life That glided fast away; And thus she sang that maiden fair From morn to eventide, 'Life's current flows time quickly goes And I shall be a bride!

'How sweet those flowers adorn the plain! I'll pluck their beauties now And form a lovely bridal chain, 'To wreath the around my brow! And still she sang, that maiden fair, 'With heart to nuptial allied;— 'Life's cur ant flows, time quickly goes, And I shall be a bride!

But as she sang her simple strain, An archer with a bow Discharged a shaft from his domain Which laid the maiden low, And now no more she sings her song For death with shilling power Has breathed upon that blooming wreath And withered every flower.

Come mortals view, the monster, who With chilling fingers fleet, Can turn a wedding ring into A mournful winding sheet; Can crush the fondest hopes sublime And in his icy loom Work up "the warp and woof" of time, In vestments for the tomb. P. L. L.

Shortening the Voyage Across the Atlantic.

Designs have been made by a Swedish naval architect for a new kind of Atlantic passenger steamer which shall attain a speed of from twenty to twenty-one knots an hour and make the voyage across the Atlantic in six days. To do this the ship must steam at an average of at least twenty knots the whole distance, and therefore, it must be capable of going faster when the wind and tide are not dead against the vessel, so as to make up for time lost when the circumstances are not so favorable.

The ship proposed by Captain Lundborg, the Swedish engineer, is to be five hundred feet long, by seventy-four broad, and to be propelled by four compound engines, capable of developing together 22,800 indicated horse-power. It is intended to carry 600 first-class and 1500 second and third class passengers, and 3000 tons of cargo, besides 3,200 tons of coal, or enough for 180 hours steaming at full speed.

The prominent idea of Captain Lundborg is to build his ship that the main body shall divide the water horizontally instead of vertically. The hull, therefore, projects below the water line, and this peculiarity of design enables him to have large engine room, to get great capacity with shallow draught, and to give his vessel favorable lines. This purpose is to reduce her resistance to a minimum. The power used would give the ship, according to the ordinary formula used for calculating speed, something over twenty knots. It is supposed, however, that she would be faster, since little power would be lost in wave-making, the water having a clean run astern, being divided horizontally by the projecting lower part of her hull, the peculiar feature of the construction.

Naval architects are not apt to look with favor on any marked departure from the ordinary principles of ship construction, and therefore Captain Lundborg's proposed vessel is likely to find adverse critics among them. The London Engineer, however, speaks with respect of his ideas, and urges that they be put to a practical test in a steamer of moderate size. Even if this is not feasible, however, steam vessels constructed after the received plans are likely before long to make the voyage across the Atlantic in the time set by him.

The United States Wheat Crop.

A correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce telegraphs from Chicago on the 18th inst.—Just back from a trip over the Northern Pacific Railroad. So far the grasshoppers have done no damage to the growing crops, and it is thought that spring wheat will not be injured by them. While the crops as a whole are good, the yield will in no case be as large as in 1880. I can see or hear of no area where the spring wheat crop will yield as much as it did in 1880.

The Orange correspondent of the Temps says in connection with the troubles in Algeria that letters were sent from Mecca in 1880 to all Mohammedan countries, vigorously appealing to the sentiment of the brotherhood uniting all Mussulmans declaring that Islam was threatened with complete destruction; that England was mistress of India, France of Algeria, and Russia of Turkestan, and it therefore behooved Mohammedans to awake and everywhere throw off the Christian dominion.

The Supreme Court completed its session at Georgetown on Friday evening. In the case of E. E. Bowie vs. E. P. Finnan, the Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount of notes sued on, with interest. In the case of Daniel Sigworth vs. the Ottawa Agricultural Insurance Company, the jury returned a verdict of $400, for the plaintiff, with interest. In the case of the Queen at the prosecution of Peter Ross, for larceny, the prisoner was discharged, the evidence not being sufficient.
