The Canadian Guards, like other infantry regiments, have a variety of assignments awaiting it and already one battalion is serving in Korea. But wherever they go, the Guardsmen will help to uphold the high standards of Canada's fighting infantry. This superb reputation forged in the fire of battle, is now being enhanced wherever our soldiers serve.

There is something stirring in the precision and teamwork of a well trained infantry unit. But the discipline of the parade ground is not a matter of display and pageantry alone. On the field of battle, it becomes part of the backbone of teamwork and discipline of the highest order. The Canadian Guardsman must be smart. He must be tough.

The training schedule of the Guardsman is intensive, for the modern infantryman must be master of many weapons and special skills. Highly experienced infantry instructors teach the Guardsmen the fine points of handling their weapons. Service in the Canadian Guards, as in all of Canada's infantry regiments, develops a spirit of teamwork as well as the ability to act as an individual.
