Sale Of Two Destroyers To Egypt Raises MP's Protest

LONDON (AP) — The government Monday disclosed the sale of two destroyers to Egypt. There was an immediate protest in the House of Commons.

Minister of State Anthony Nutting said the deal for two class Z destroyers was closed May 21. Egypt has paid for the vessels and arranged to have them refitted in Britain.

Britain's class Z destroyers were built during the Second World War. They have a displacement of 1,710 tons and carry three 4.4-inch guns.

Most of the criticism came from Labor benches but Conservative Patrick Maitland joined by complaining about the sale "of arms to those who might turn them against us."

ASKS DELAY

Maitland demanded the government stall on transfer of the destroyers until settlement of the British protest over the shelling of the British steamer Anschun by Egyptian shore batteries July 3.

Nutting refused to hold up the ships' transfer but said "I can offer this much consolation, that the refit will take several months and possibly a year."

Herbert Morrison, former foreign secretary in the Labor government, attacked the government for supplying the destroyers while Egypt is still at war with Israel.

HOLDING TO AGREEMENT

Nutting replied that the government was operating "the spirit and letter of the Tripartite Declaration of 1950" made when Morrison was foreign secretary.

The declaration was signed by Britain, the United States and France and binds the three powers to keep the peace in the Middle East and to intervene if there is any forcible effort to alter Israel's frontiers.

Nutting said Britain recently had supplied two similar destroyers to Israel and the Tripartite Declaration "provides we shall supply limited quantities of arms to Middle East states for their legitimate self-defence."

Revisits United Kingdom On Nuffield Scholarship

(Excerpts from letters received from Flying Officer Archie J. Johnstone, of Burlington, P. E. I., now travelling in the United Kingdom on a Nuffield agricultural scholarship; continued from a previous issue).

DAGANHAM, Eng. — The Ford Company of Britain last month produced an average total of 1526 vehicles per day of which 220 were tractors, many of which we noted were marked for export to America or Canada, (99 to 1 are diesel).

I suppose that of all the things that we have seen or can expect to see, there will be few that can be more exciting than seeing a tractor or motor car being constructed from start to finish. Another thing which we noted was that the employees were working with a will and seemed to be genuinely enjoying their work. This has not been the case everywhere we have gone. In some plants in particular they seemed to be afflicted with an extreme case of lethargy and couldn't have cared less. One employee tapped me on the shoulder. "What part of Canada do you come from" I told him. "Aw Hell", he said, "I come from Ontario".

The first thing that you see are the raw materials being fed into the huge smelters, from which the metal pigs emerge on a long escalator and drop with a clang into the waiting vehicles. Once inside you begin to see the molds for the various castings, which are the components of the particular vehicle being produced. First we saw the motor blocks being poured, of which about ten percent are sent back to the smelters as rejects. Then in regular succession come the other part, which are placed on the hooks dangling from the mono-rail overhead, as soon as they have been cleaned, sanded and inspected.

From here they go to another section of the factory where they join still more parts and are there assembled into a car, truck or tractor. This is of course the most interesting part of the process and one we followed with undiminished interest from a mere motor block to final assembly, through the paint shop and dryers and out of the testing grounds.

Each employee is given just so many minutes to execute his particular function and the vehicle moves on to the next, to allow him to add his part or tighten the nut assigned to him. Much of the work might appear tiresome and inclined toward making the individual worker just another digit in a vast concentration of efficiency, but whatever the secret of Ford is, there seemed to be no mass unrest or discontent. One thing that we did discover is that the pay is good and that there is no piece work. Our guide was not prepared to say whether this might have some bearing on the matter or not.

The Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew are said to be the most wonderful of their kind is the World, Kew Gardens is primarily intended as an institution to advance the study of the world's flora and to make possible the identification of all known forms of vegetable life. Each year ten thousand postal inquiries reach the Director from all over the world and are as various as the shades in the Solar Spectrum.

It is too early for many of the flowers, including the water lilies, but the rhododendrons are magnificent at the present and so are the tulips. When they have passed there will be something else to take their place so the gardens never lack for colour or interest. I suppose the Palm House is one of the largest glass buildings in the world and one of the best known of its kind, as its design is not easily forgotten. It is however only one of a large number of buildings, including four museums of Natural History. There are some 45,000 varieties of plants in the gardens including 10,000 trees and shrubs. Many thousand of different plants are raised from seed each year, so it is not lacking in variety or beauty.

To me 'Dam Busters' is one of the best books that I have yet read on the War and a real triumph for Paul Brickhill, already well launched on the road to fame with his 'The Great Escape'. Now a film has been made of this epic event and is being shown for the first time at the Empire, Leicester Square. I went, and got in too, through the Londoner's at the hotel. To me I was crazy to try to get in on Saturday night. I still think that the small fortune it cost me to get a seat was worth it and I would go again if the opportunity presented itself.

Wing Commander Guy Gibson, V. C., D. S. O., and Bar, D. F. C. and Bar, who was later killed while directing a Bombing operation from near the deck, was of course the leader, and of the three dams attacked and burst that night, he picked the larger and perhaps more difficult Moehne for his own bombing run. Then having delivered his bomb, flew in parallel with the other bomber to help draw the flak. Perhaps the most remarkable thing about the success of the raid was not the actual dropping of the bombs, but that of the work done in designing and perfecting the special bomb used by a brilliant scientist named Barnes Wallace. This man, by his persistence and press-on spirit, regardless of who differed with him, finally won through. It almost seemed at times that "Bomber Harris" and even Cochrane were willing to pack it up, but something always happened to keep Wallace's research going. I think that anybody, even remotely interested in the work done by the R. A. F. will be genuinely interested in this film.

Fred and I had planned to meet Mr. Stanley Beard on Sunday morning and accompany him to church, but because of well intentioned but ill informed persons in the vicinity of the church, we were misguided and missed the sermon. Instead of the church service we saw the last end of the Changing of the Guard at Buckingham Palaand went on a short tour through Westminster Abbey. Part of the Abbey was closed to visitors and it so happened that the new R. A. F. Memorial Window is in the closed section, so we missed it for this visit at least. In the afternoon we took a tube to Marble Arch to hear the soap-box orators in Hyde Park.

A large crowd was gathered around a woman who was singing nursery rhymes at the top of her voice to whomever would listen. She was too ridiculous to even be funny.

½ ½ ½

The second orator was delivering a castigation against Billy Graham. He was an excellent speaker and not altogether lacking in logic. He likened Dr. Graham to the millionaires, whom he described as all being filthy crooks. This seemed to sit well with the mentality of the crowd and you could guess which way most of them would be voting on Thursday. Some recognized his speech for the rot it was, despite the thin cloak of justification and rationalization in which he managed to clothe his well chosen words. As a clergyman recently said in a conversation with us, "It is a pity some people couldn't spend more time trying to help themselves and others upward, rather than spending their energies trying to reduce someone a bit better off in material goods than themselves." Nevertheless the arguments had an effect on the crowd around him and there were many nods of agreement and assent.

The third speaker was a drunk with a bloody face and thick voice speaking on Scottish Nationalism. "And why do the Scots want to have a Palliament in Edinburgh" asked a voice from the crowd. And his answer was "Because we want to see England free". Which brought a roar of laughter from the crowd. On a high stand, covered with a banner imploring tolerance for all coloured peoples, stood a negro, but all we heard him saw was 'Is the any mo questions" which he repeated over and over again at regular intervals.

The final speaker was standing on an orange crate and seemed to be some kind of a self-styled philosopher. He deplored the fact that so many people think that far away things are best and that things at hand are commonplace and to be tolerated. He stood with his head to one side and staring into the sky somewhere just over the rooftops he said 'I just let my mind act as a receiving set and I go just where it directs and do just as it directs" was hoping that it wouldn't direct him out into the stream of traffic that was passing not that he would be such a loss to the world but his passing could be dickins of a nuisance to some-

When He calls for me to come.

Switch R. C. N Appointments

OTTAWA (CP)—Two senior officers of the Royal Cnadian Navy will exchange appointments early in August.

Cmdr. Reginald A. Webber, 43, of Ottawa will take command of the destroyer escort Huron at Halifax Aug. 8. He succeeds Cmdr. James Charles Pratt, 41, of Windsor, Ont., who will take up CMdr Webber's present post as director of officer personnel at naval headquarters three days later.

Like his predecessor, Cmdr. Pratt will hold the acting rank of captain in the personnel director job.

CMdr. Webber was born at Smyrna, in Asia, and joined the RCN while living in Ottawa in 1930. He has served on many seas in Canadian destroyers, among them the Saguenay and the Saskatchewan during the Second World War. He holds the Distinguished Service Cross, awarded him in January, 1945, for "gallantry and outstanding service in the face of the enemy."

Since the war he has commanded the destroyer Sioux and served as executive officer on the cruiser Quebec, when it was called the Uganda. He also has held various appointments ashore on both coasts.

Cmdr. Pratt, a native of Windsor, entered the Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve in March, 1940. His wartime service included command of the minesweepers Goderich and Oshawa and toward the war's end as training commander of the staff of captain, Halifax.

His post-war service since he transferred to the regular navy in 1946 has included attendance at the National Defence College, Kingston, Ont. He took over the Huron in August, 1954, and during its September-December tour of the Korean theatre last year served as senior officer of Canadian destroyers there.
