

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

By Thornton W. Burgess
HARD TO BELIEVE

Always keep an open mind. Lest to truth you may be blind. —Old Mother Nature.

Peter Rabbit had gone over to the Green Forest to call on his big cousin, Juniper the Hare, but Peter had wandered this way and that way looking for him, and finally had become a little tired. He found a comfortable place where he would be out of sight under some hemlock boughs, and settle himself to rest. He didn't mean to go to sleep, but he did doze off. He was awakened by an odd sound.

There sat Mrs. Hooty the Great Horned Owl.

At first, he thought he must be dreaming. It was a familiar sound, yet he couldn't remember ever having heard it at this time of year before. You see, winter was over yet. Snow still lay on the Green Meadows, and all through the Green Forest.

"I must have dreamed it," thought Peter. And even as he thought it he heard it again. It was a loud sound. Indeed, it was rather a soft sound. It was a pleasant sound. He pricked up his ears and peeped out from under the bough. He saw no one, and for two or three minutes, he heard nothing more. Then it was repeated, "COO-OO-OO." It really was a soft coo. "Mourner the Dove!" exclaimed Peter. "What in the world is he doing up here at this time of year?"

Peter started to crawl out from his hiding place. Then he stopped. He didn't know why he stopped. It was just as if something had stopped him without his having anything to do with it. He listened again. Once more, came that soft gentle sound, "COO-OO-OO."

"It must be that Mrs. Mourner is here too," thought Peter. "Mourner wouldn't be cooing like that unless he was talking to her. Those are his love notes. But this is a funny time for those Doves to be thinking of nesting. And it is only when they are getting ready for that, that I ever hear Mourner cooing."

Once more, Peter started to go out from under cover. Once more, he stopped, and didn't know why. It was as if something, or someone, was holding him back. Then he happened to look up in a tree very close at hand, a tree that was bare. There sat Mrs. Hooty the Great Horned Owl.

Peter no longer had any desire to go out. In fact he very quietly drew back lest those great yellow eyes of Mrs. Hooty should spy him. He forgot all about Mourner the Dove. If there are any two folks whom Peter fears more than others, they are Hooty and Mrs. Hooty. Peter wasn't sleepy now. No indeed, he wasn't sleepy now. He kept his eyes fixed on Mrs. Hooty. He wondered why she was there. He wondered if she was living in the neighborhood. If she was, he would keep away from the neighborhood in the future. And then he heard that soft gentle cooing again.

"If Mourner doesn't look out, Mrs. Hooty will get him," thought Peter, and wished he could warn Mourner.

Just then Hooty himself flew over from another tree to the one in which Mrs. Hooty was sitting. He leaned forward toward her and once more came that soft gentle "COO-OO-OO." It was hard to believe, but Peter's eyes and his ears told him that it was Hooty, and no one else who was cooing. Of course, Peter didn't know it, but this was Valentine's Day.

THE "CONTRACT-STEALER"

When a certain type of expert has a partner who is not nearly as skillful as himself in the play of the cards, he is apt to "hog the bidding." This means, of course, that he does everything within his power to end up as the declarer, even to the extent of making the fanciest bids.

South dealer.
North-South vulnerable.
