THE WRONG WORD. (British Colonist.) If the word coercion as it is used in connection with the Manitoba school question means merely that the Government of Manitoba is to be forced to do what the province has voluntarily, in the most solemn and the most binding of all covenants, covenanted to do, no one would dream of saying that the coercion deserves to be blamed or reproached.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report. The stranding of the St. Paul suggests a curious Analogy. The stranding of the great steamship St. Paul, which sailed from the ports of the New York coast, cannot fail to suggest to biblical students the analogous experience of the distinguished apostle whose name the ship bears.

A YOUTHFUL PHENOMENON. He is a Sumner in the Way of a Rapid Mathematician. "Is Chaucey Depeux in?" asked a youth with a disarranged countenance, as he entered the office of the New York Central Railway Co. Tuesday morning. "Not just at present," answered a clerk, leaning down from his stool at the young man and his buttonhole bouquet. "What do you want of Mr. Depeux?" "I want a job working for this railroad company." "All the desirable positions are filled," replied the clerk. "Who runs the department where all the figures are made?" asked the boy. "You are probably looking for Mr. Carstensen, the comptroller." The boy made his way into the presence of Comptroller Carstensen and asked for a position. He had a letter of recommendation, wherein the statement was made that he was a master of mathematics and a lightning calculator. The comptroller read the letter and glanced at the youth. "How old are you?" he asked. "I will be 16 on the 20th of this month." "Where do you come from?" "Just got in from Albany." "Ever work in a railroad office?" "Never worked in any office." "What can you do?" "I can figure for several sizes and a lightning calculator. The comptroller read the letter and glanced at the youth. "I don't know what you call it, but I'd like to figure. If you want to try me all you got to do is to give me four figures to multiply by four more. If I don't give the correct result in a second, then the game is off. I can add four columns of figures and never make a mistake." The comptroller of the big railroad became interested. He gave the boy the most difficult problems in addition, subtraction, multiplication and division. Then he called in sixty clerks to witness the remarkable performance of the young fellow with the scrambled hair and buttonhole bouquet. "You may go to work to-day." "This boy—whose name is Alfred Blum—is a most remarkable hand at figures. He was born in Albany. Since the age of four he has shown an aptitude for mathematics. Up to this time he had sold papers in Albany and supported the family. His father has been an invalid, and he was the bread winner for several small children. His devotion to his duty made everybody his friend. He gave exhibitions of computation that were paid for by those who took an interest in his wilears.—New York Journal.

UNSEATED BY A GIRL. Traveller on "L" Road Compelled to Yield His Place to a Picture Hat. "I never get up to give my seat in the 'L' cars at night," says Thompson. "Why should I? I am as tired as any of those blamed women, and I pay my five cents for a seat—if I can get one." Thompson was sitting in a paper picture chair evening with a crowd of people standing along the aisle, looking at him curiously as he leaned back in his seat. It was a warm evening, and many of the passengers were wet. Immediately in front of Thompson stood a tall girl, with a mischievous gleam in her eyes and a hat with a brim turned up at the sides and her hand. She wanted Thompson's seat, but she could see there was little chance of getting it. "I'll let him know I'm here anyhow," she said to the girl with her, with a sly smile. Thompson was deep in his paper, and appeared to be unconscious of the presence of the girl, although she stepped upon his foot and rustled his paper with the bottom of her group. Then she took damper measures. The snow in the hollow brim of her hat had melted, and she bent over Thompson, so that a stream of water ran upon his paper and emptied itself into his vest pocket. Thompson uttered a prayer for the innocent young girl, and then she turned the other side of her hat, so that the water from the opposite side of her hat would go down to the paper. "Slash-squish-dampfounder, what-the-hells and blazes!" Thompson exclaimed as he leaped from his seat. "Oh, don't let me deprive you of your seat. You must be a woman, and you are a demure maiden, as she winked again at her friend, with the eye that was furthest away from Thompson. But Thompson never saw her again, so that she dropped into his seat with a sigh of content.—New York Press.

THE WRONG WORD. (British Colonist.) If the word coercion as it is used in connection with the Manitoba school question means merely that the Government of Manitoba is to be forced to do what the province has voluntarily, in the most solemn and the most binding of all covenants, covenanted to do, no one would dream of saying that the coercion deserves to be blamed or reproached. When a judge declares that a man must pay the sum which he has bound himself by a note of hand to pay, no one says that there is anything wrong in the coercion which he threatens, or if he decides that a contractor must set up to the contract he has entered into or he must pay damages, no one dreams of condemning the judge as a tyrant because he coerces the contractor. It must, then, be admitted that it is altogether wrong to say that coercion is applied whether it is an act of tyranny or a justifiable and a necessary use of power. By the way in which the word "coercion" is used by the opponents of the Manitoba school question, it is invariably signified an abuse of authority. But it does not. When it is used to describe what is done when an individual is forced to do what it is his duty to do and what he ought to have done without the use of force, moral or physical, it is either misapplied or it conveys the idea that the compulsion used was legitimate and necessary. Those who understand the Manitoba school question know that it is both mean and dishonest to apply the word "coercion" in a reproachful sense to the proceedings which the Government have taken in that matter.
