 Weath - Miller and Helen, The Dundas-Hamilton marsh in southwestern Ontario, is slowly being drained by the water shortage being experienced in the Great Lakes.

Canal Drained As Lake Level Shows Decline

The canal had made 19th century Dundas a major port and a serious rival to the embryonic Hamilton Bay. In a 17-year period in the mid 1800s, the waters receded and the bustling little city lost sight of the future and relapsed into a near ghost town. Today, with a population of 14,000, Dundas lies deep in the shadow of Hamilton.

Crucial snow walk through mud where European schooners once sailed; fish flounder in scattered pools; muskrats roam the marsh seeking fresh water; and mequetoues have taken over the area.
