MARY HAWORTH

In-Laws Present Problem From Repentant Ex-Spouse

Wear Mary Haworth: At age 15, I married Harry, then 35. He is a truck driver, home once every two or three weeks. We had nine wonderful years together, and two sons, ages 8 and 6.

Then I decided I wanted to drink and run around, so nine months ago I left Harry and the boys, and began dating just anybody to have a good time. I started a divorce, lost two ears and two jobs and was forced to keep on the move.

Finally, without car, job or food, I was forced to return to Harry; but later got a job and left again; and this time married a boy 21. Within a week I realized I didn't love him; and that I truly loved Harry and the boys. I hadn't known, until then, what love was.

TALKS HER DOWN

Harry paid my hospital bill and took me back, after a miscarriage; and we plan to remarry. Harry and I, when my present divorce goes through. The problem is his mother and sister, who won't forgive my sin and accept me again as an in-law.

When Harry is leaving for another trip, they drive him down town to his waiting truck and won't take me along. The other day they wanted to take the older boy out without his brother and I said "No." So we had words. They asked who am I to boss the boys, who mean nothing to me, nor I to them. In effect they said: "Go away, keep your nose out of our lives."

Now I can't even talk to Harry's mother on the phone; she won't have anything to do with me. How can I make her understand that I realize my mistake and am terribly sorry I ever left? And that it did teach me how much I love the boys and their father? How can I make her see they are my boys too? How can we put the past behind us, forgiven and forgotten? V.Y.

LOT OF HISTORY

Dear V. Y.: On the chronological side, your letter baffles me. It was written in mid-October, which means you first left Harry last February—"nine months ago," you say.

In these few months, you returned to him once; then left again, to marry a 21-year-old, a growing strength to do right, regardless of obstruction and resistance.

However, you urgently need first-hand family counselling, also the support of religious fellowship, to tide you over this serious crisis. So reach out for such help in your own community. There is a Family Service unit in the city through which you write; also fine clergy, I would suppose.

HEART OF THE MATTER However, we'll bypass these "clothes and buttons" of the story and go to the heart of the problem, namely your difficulties in trying to wash out your sins, straighten up and fly right.

On the moral plane of life—which does literally exist in the universe, as thoughtful minds have always recognized—it appears that our ancient enemy, the devil, is determined keeping his nose in your affairs, with the help of Harry's mother.

She is the instrument and the mouthpiece of a spirit of hate that is trying to block your chastened efforts to renounce wrongdoing and scramble back to the safety of good behavior. Also, it is evident that she is trying to undermine Harry's admirable disposition to be true to his marriage vows—to love and cherish you faithfully "for better, for worse," regardless of cost to his patience and pride.

CONQUER UNFORGIVENESS How can you win a charitable, forgiving, helpful, cooperative response from her? Maybe you can't. She may be a pitiless practitioner of malicious, jealous, destructive pride-sins herself. But this you can do: You can forgive her efforts to destroy you, morally. Then the angels will be on your side. You will experience

MR. AND MRS. CECIL CLIVE BARRETT

Young Couple Pledge Vows In Double Ring Ceremony

A pretty wedding was solemnized recently at the Murray Park United Church when Roma May, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Nicolle, White Sands, became the bride of Cecil Clive Barrett, son of Mrs. Reginald Barrett and the late Mr. Barrett of Portage LaPrairie, Manitoba. Rev. Fred MacKinnon performed the double ring ceremony. Wedding music was played by Mrs. Carl Richards.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in her ballerina-length gown of white brocade taffeta with fitted bodice fastened in the back with tiny covered buttons. She carried a bouquet of red roses.

Mrs. Elmon Nicolle, sister-in-law of the bride, was bridesmaid and wore a street length dress of pastel green with matching headpiece, gloves and shoes. She carried a nosegay of yellow carnations.

Mr. Elmon Nicolle, brother of the bride, was best man. Ushers were Robert Barrett, brother of the bridegroom, and William Nicolle, brother of the bride.

The church was tastefully decorated with pastel shades of gladiolus and mixed flowers and the guest wens with white satin bows.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple and approximately fifty guests motored to Montague where a reception was held at Hillside Inn. The bride's table was centered with a three-tier wedding cake, topped with a miniature bride and groom. Rev. Fred MacKinnon proposed the toast to the bride to which the groom responded. Telegrams were received from Germany, England, Manitoba, Ontario and Newfoundland, and were read by the best man.

Out of town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. William White, Mr. and Mrs. Lorin Lewis, Pictou, N.S., Mr. and Mrs. Edward Quipp and their two children Heather and Jerry, Kingsmere, P.Q., Mr. Robert Barrett, Mrs. Del Marie Sing, and Mrs. Reginald Barrett, Portage LaPrairie, Manitoba.

After the reception the young couple left on a honeymoon trip to New York. They will make their home in Ottawa, where the bride is on the staff of the Royal Mint, and the groom is with National Research.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Fluttering Of Stork Wings Brings Us Tidings Of Birth

Ravens in a pair, ebon-winged, hoarse-voiced, made noisy excursions today from our woodlands. Dwellers there for years, they are birds we could very well do without. However an extremely intriguing bird we mothers of this neighborhood and road, have been noting in recent months: A long billed (fanciful) creature, not unlike, we believe, that heron which brings us news of down-the-river places come summery days. In its native land this we have been glimpsing, homes on thatched rooftops, they say, and is a symbol of good fortune to the folk he thus favors.

We caught signs of his presence as he soared over the summer-woodlands, and high above the flower-blossomed meadows, and the pastures where the sunshine jewelled the sleek sides of the herd of cattle and made pearls in an emerald setting of the flocks.

When the daisies danced in a scented breeze, we mothers knew he was on wing. When summer waned and autumn spread her glorious shades, flame and russet and gold, we could hear the faint rustle of his presence—in that silence which gives the leaves back to the earth that nurtured them, or to float away like little lost dreams on the breast of the stream. For always the tidings of an approaching birth, be it in a Queen's palace or in a cottage—a Queen, or other loved wife, or a poor forlorn lass, the word touches deeply the heart of every mother. For in our thoughts we are with them—go with them, follow at length down to the depths of that strange valley of shadow and through that dim, and up joyfully to the heights again—and the news that all is well.

Last night then—or was it this morning in the starshine? In any event, we think, it was that time when James, the lightest sleeper we know, stirred in the wide old bed and came smartly awake. "What was that sound, Ellen?" he wondered. "Oh a plane, I guess" he commented and settled again to his pillow.

It was, we know now, the stork bearing his precious parcel of humanity to the farm-home, near Alderlea, though hidden from us by that expanse of woodland, across the road from lane's end.

We think if we had come then to a window we should have seen the trailing ribbons of streamers which bound it as re-routing his course he set his wings toward the hospital which gives our community, its babes.

A baby-girl it is—to be the second daughter in a family of three—to cry and smile, to creep and walk and talk, and make her way to school; to learn the womanly arts of preparing meals and spreading tables and keeping house as does granddaughter, and altogether be a blessing and well loved in the home.

The stork? Yes. Do you too not catch a glimpse of his wings sometimes? To mothers what a dear, fascinating creature he is, wherever whenever, we catch a sound of his presence!

Shower Held At Irishtown

IRISHTOWN — A large number of friends and relatives gathered at the Irishtown Hall on Wednesday evening, November 18th., to attend the shower in honour of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Campbell who were recently married.

Streamers of pink and white made a pretty setting for the happy occasion. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Thelma Campbell while Mrs. LeRoy Campbell and Mr. Hillard Andrews escorted the bride and groom to their seat of honour.

The gifts were carried in by Mrs. Borden Campbell, opened by Mrs. Alvin Sudbury and Mrs. Ruth Carr read the verses. The gifts were arranged by Mrs. Thelma Campbell.

After receiving the many gifts and envelopes, James, on behalf of his wife, thanked all present and extended a cordial invitation to their home.

Everyone joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows". Lunch was served by the ladies of the community. Dancing was enjoyed the remainder of the evening with music furnished by Don Reeves, Ivan Daye and Joe Wigmore of Kensington.
