

B.C. Issues Are Considered As Ballot Boxes Dusted Off

By BRUCE LEVITT
Vancouver (CP) — British Columbia, the province with the busiest ballot boxes in the land, dusting them off again. On Sept. 30, voters will turn out for the fifth provincial general election in 10 years—all of them won by Social Credit. In the last 15 months alone, they have endured three provincial by-elections, two federal general elections and a federal by-election.

Premier Bennett says he needs a new mandate at a time development of the Peace and before the real depths of his troubles are realized.

His opponents say the real issue is a need to restore trust and confidence in provincial affairs. They say Mr. Bennett is desperate, going to the people ments speed up the calling of the election.

'NO REAL SURPRISE'
Ray Perrault, leader of the Liberal party who cut short his Hawaiian honeymoon said the election was no real surprise because: "The premier has often used this technique in the past to divert public attention federal justice minister at the time of the original Columbia River negotiations, have no seats.

Social Credit has 31 seats, one of them successfully defended in a recent by-election.

The New Democratic Party, led by Robert Strachan, hold 16 seats. The Progressive Conservatives, under E. David Fulton, Premier's Conference in Halifax — was quoted as saying there would be no election this year.

As for the government's public power policies—the giant B.C. Electric utility complex, expropriated by the government as soon as it had a clear mandate.
