CHATTERER GIVES ADVICE

Who listens well to good advice
May find its worth beyond all price.
—Old Mother Nature.

Chatterer the Red Squirrel has much too much voice for one of his size. At least that is what some of his neighbors think for he is a noisy scamp. Yes, sir, he is a noisy little rascal, the noisiest one in all the Green Forest. He dearly loves the sound of his own voice, and he doesn't care a twitch of his tail whether other people do or don't. He has what is called a scolding tongue. He is never happier than when he is scolding some one. There are folks like that, you know.

Just now he was scolding Sharpshin the Hawk. Sharpshin had almost caught him. It was Chatterer's quickness in dodging around the trunk of a tree that had saved him. Had he been the least bit slower he would have been caught. Now his tongue fairly flew as he called Sharpshin all the bad names he could think of, and he could think of a lot. The trim-looking small Hawk paid no attention to him. He had missed a dinner he had been very sure of, and was disappointed, but he was used to such disappointments "Better luck next time," he said to himself, and flew away. Long after he was out of sight Chatterer was still scolding.

In his home in a hole in a tall dead tree Little Billy Possum heard Chatterer and finally poked his head out to see what was going on. Chatterer saw him and promptly forgot all about Sharpshin.

"What are you doing in there?" demanded Chatterer from a neighboring tree jerking his tail as if somehow that had something to do with getting the words out.

"Ah'm living here," replied the little Possum.

"Since when?" barked the Red Squirrel.

"Since Ah done find it," replied Little Billy. "What fo, do yo' ask?"

"That house belongs to Whitefoot the Wood Mouse," barked Chatterer.

"Your mistake, Brer Squirrel. Your mistake. Brer Whitefoot done gone away. This is mah home now," replied Little Billy.

"If Whitefoot has gone away it must be because you drove him out," said Chatterer.

"No, suh, Ah didn't drive him out. There was no one in here when Ah moved in," declared the small Possum.

"What are you doing in there?" demanded Chatterer from a neighboring tree.

Chattrere chuckled "So that's it!" he declared. "You're learning young. Yes, sir, you are learning young. And that's the time to learn. If you don't learn then, and learn fast, you never will learn. Just remember that."

"Why won't I?" asked Little Billy wonderingly.

"Because you won't be here," retorted Chatterer.

THE WRONG TECHNIQUE

It is pleasant, and often advisable, to ruff losers with dummy's short trumps, but many players adopt this technique when a far better plan is available. For examples:

North dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ K J ♥ A J 9 7 ♦ 8 ♣ A 7 6 5 4 2
♠ 7 ♥ K Q 2 ♦ K Q J 7 6 5 3 ♣ K Q	N W E S	♠ 10 9 4 ♥ 10 8 5 3 ♦ 9 4 ♣ J 9 8 3
	♠ A Q 8 6 5 3 2 ♥ 6 4 ♦ A 10 2 ♣ 10

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	2 ♦
2 ♥	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
5 ♠	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

West opened the diamond king. Declarer won and promptly ruffed a diamond with dummy's jack, then cashed the club ace and ruffed a club. He ruffed his last diamond with the spade king—and then faced the problem of getting back his own hand safely. He solved this, temporarily, by leading the ace and a low heart. It was West who won, and so declarer did not have to fear a club return by East which might give West an over-ruff, but this was of no consequence. South soon found that his ace and queen of trumps were not adequate to draw the outstanding trumps, and he had to concede the setting trick.

South lost, not one, but two tricks by ruffing his low diamonds instead of setting up dummy's long club suit, as he should have done. Proper play would have given South all 13 tricks!

After taking the opening lead, the right plan is to cash the club ace and ruff a club. Now go to dummy with a trump and ruff another club with a low trump. If West can overruff (he couldn't, of course, in the actual case), the contract itself is still safe. When West merely discards on the trick, South ruffs a diamond with the spade king, then ruffs away East's last club stopper, draws East's two remaining trumps, and claims the balance
