Research Continues In Creativity In The Arts

Dr. Viktor Lowenfeld Professor of Art Education at the Pennsylvania State University, is one of the most outstanding men in the field of Art Education today. He is the author of several important books on art education including "Creative and Mental Growth" in which he reports his findings on art experiences not only with normal children, but with those handicapped by blindness, deafness and mental retardation. In a recent address to the American Association of Colleges for teacher education he reported on findings of himself and his team-mates in an investigation into the nature of creativity in the arts. At the same time he found that elsewhere research was going on into creativity in science. The two teams came to practically the same conclusions. In their search to find how to stimulate creativity and to find what differentiates between creative and less or non-creative persons the teams came upon eight significant points: 1. Sensitivity to Problems. No creative work is possible without being based on a sensitive experience. Thus the promotion of sensitivity to problems and experiences is a vital part of art education. PETITE DRESS

The ability to individualize current fashion, adapting it to her own ideas and type, makes Lily Pons one of the world's best-dressed women. The dainty diva selects her clothes with great care for her professional appearances. La Roche has fashioned a short dinner dress that is well worth study by a petite woman. The accent is on the beautiful curved flower pouf skirt that is neither shorter nor long. It contrasts well with the simple, sleeveless bodice. Line is given to the dress by the long row of hand-covered buttons of the same white satin organza as the dress.

Her chapel length veil of embroidered illusion net was held in place with a pearl trimmed nylon tiara and she carried a cascade bouquet of American Beauty roses.

Miss Lorena DesRoches, the bridesmaid, was attired in a blue net with length gown with a matching tiara and carried a bouquet of yellow roses. Mr. J. Donald Gillis, brother of the bride, was groomsman.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Sympathy Is Extended To James & All The Kin
Today brought her kindred and friends together for the funeral of James' sister, whose passing leaves him "alone" in the world. The service was held in the "old Kirk" at the corner, which she so lovingly and faithfully attended when her world was young and fair, and interment was in the family plot in the churchyard beside.

She rests close by the little beaten path of shortcut which took her, and the other youngsters of her faith from this road, to Sabbath and mid-week services, to choir practice and that for the Christmas concert and the activities of church those oden times knew.

"I don't believe I should mind dying in the spring" one who stood by said, at the close of the committal rites, when the Island-red of the clay was being gently moulded into a new mound there. "It's a nice time of year to go — not like on a cheerless day of fall, or a bleak one of winter's. It seems less final at this season. More hopeful, you know, rather a beginning than an end."

And in proof of her words, over the fields and all about was the new growth, the fresh green of meadow, the wonder of unfurled leaves, the loveliness of the seedtime, where not long ago all had been seemingly dead and bare. But whether it be in the joy "of Springtime or in the dreary fall" we see the graves close over those we have known and loved and lost awhile we know that truly, "There is no death. What seems so it transition, this life of mortal breath, is but a suburb of the life Elysian, whose portals we call Death."

So "not without hope" we leave them, the loved ones whose earthly remains rest tonight beneath June skies. Their passing occasions regrets. None walks or goes his way alone. There are always those bereaved — they who mourn. And these have the comforting gift of memory.

Many a memory remains with them of the one called away. We have our memories. And the thought comes that they go to blaze the trail ahead — that sooner or later we too shall for sake the earthly paths that are ours and one day lay us down in peace "perchance to dream."

Until tomorrow — — Diary Good-night.
