Girl Guide News

Dominion Annual Report

Do you know how many Guides and Brownies there are in Canada—75,003, an increase of 7,415. Each year it seems we add to our number girls who are keen and enthusiastic to share in our work. In P. E. I. we actually have a Provincial total of 820. This figure includes Commissioners, Leaders, Guides and Brownies, but even so it is pretty good for a small Province. We should not stop at this figure though. Each Guide and Brownie should try to get a new member this year. Imagine what an increase we would show for 1950-1951. So how about making this a Company and Pack project, see how many recruits you can get and write to Mrs. Jenkins, 76 School Street, Charlottetown. You will all remember that wonderful time last Fall when we were honoured with a visit from the Chief Commissioner of all Canada, Mrs. D. E. S. Wishart. During her tour she covered 12,000 miles, visiting all 10 Provinces to see Guides and Brownies.

What memories she must have of all the little incidents that must have endeared her still more if possible, to Guiding. In Mrs. Wishart's annual report special mention was made of "the faithful work done by our many volunteer Leaders. They are the ones who give so much of their leisure time to help our Canadian girls to become better Canadian citizens." I have a copy of the report and each Provincial report is detailed. I found it most interesting to read of other Provincial activities and if any Leaders or Local Associations would like to have it I would be happy to loan my copy. Mention is also made of a book published through the generosity of the Wool Bureau of Canada, called "Wool And How To Use It". It is free and will be distributed to all Guides and Brownies shortly through your Leaders.

Awards of Guiding
The Silver Cross was awarded to Tasma Hinch, age 7, a Brownie of B. C. who rescued a small boy of 2 from the swollen waters of Campbell River; Maria Mitchell, age 11 of Vancouver, who ran into a burning building to save a crippled and partially blind woman; Valerie Stepp, age 10 of the Sicamous Company, B.C. who saved the life of a boy age 9 who was drowning. The Gilt Cross was awarded to 6 other Guides who performed outstanding acts of bravery. I did wonder if these splendid courageous young girls would have been so brave if they had not had Guide training. I doubt it. Do take your Guide work into your everyday life, not just at a meeting, you may be called upon some day to think and act quickly. Make 1950-1951 good and sincere guiding—practice the Laws and the Promise daily and do, I would urge so strongly, be kind to others, be helpful to your parents and try to do right always. Even little girls like it when someone is especially kind to them and say "isn't she nice?" so all of you no matter how old you are just try to be kind to others and see how nice it will make you feel too.

Central Royalty
Now a word once again of our C. R. Pack. They are really in the news lately, but just wait C. R., the others will be catching up with you soon. I could not resist telling you about this little item for Brownies. One of the Brownies had a new idea for the Collectors Badge, she

Canada Reverts To Standard Time Saturday

(By The Canadian Press)
Virtually all Canada reverts to standard time at midnight Saturday.

It means that in most large towns and cities across the Dominion citizens will put back their clocks one hour. The time-piece were moved ahead when daylight time went into effect in the spring. Working from west to east, the clock-shifting routine will go on in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Alberta is unconcerned about it all, for that Province holds to standard the year round.

In Ontario, Toronto and Hamilton have approved an extension of daylight time until Nov. 25 as a power conservation measure. Only other exceptions in the east are several cities in Quebec, and Halifax. Nova Scotia's first city will remain on daylight time until Oct. 28.

That, too, is a power-conservation move. In most parts of Nova Scotia's Annapolis Valley, the switch back to standard time was at Sept. 9. The rest of the Province changes this week-end.

Montreal, which normally sets the time-pattern for Quebec City and neighboring Levis, will go back to standard Oct. 28. Daylight dates of April 30 to Oct. 28 were fixed by Quebec City Council early in the year, and the Council has turned down two recent requests from the Board of Trade, railways and radio stations to advance the closing date.

Thus, Quebec, Three Rivers, Levis and Granby are scheduled to stay on daylight with Montreal until Oct. 28. Sherbrooke is due to switch back to standard Sept. 30.

submitted 51 garden flowers with a list of names that was checked, with her naming each one correctly. On checking them over at home later I found one that had me completely stumped—"Nigger Wool"—that was certainly a new one—but also something that I learned too. I was even able to check some of my unknown garden plants, or should I tell Brownies that? I have quite a display of flowers now, thanks to Central Royalty. A collection could be made and pressed in an album for the collectors badge if any Brownie is interested. We have lots of Badges at Headquarters, 76 School Street. Let's see some more Brownie badges this winter.

Slow Boat

Unlawful experiments on human beings. Ah!
"He can do little harm now," Stefan told him.
"That is not the point. Your brain is always so slow, my dear Stefan. You see—they put up a poster. If you are a war criminal they cannot find you." He paused and added in a hoarse whisper, "If you are a displaced person they cannot lose you."
"Courage," said Stefan. "There is the American."
"Sh!" Jan warned him to be silent. A gendarme came near, his short cloak hugged closely about him against the coldness of the night. He glanced towards them and told them to move on. He flung the words as he might have done to a stray dog. A few steps, and he had forgotten all about them.

"What did I tell?" whispered Jan, triumphantly. "Come — you have recovered your breath. We go to visit civilisation. Imagine it! A house along the Corniche." He dropped his bantering tone and asked Stefan. Do you remember what it is like to have a home?"
THE WANTED MAN
Jan would have recognized the poster which Dr. Prinz was carrying, as he crossed the elaborately furnished hall of a large house along the Corniche. Prinz moved stiffly, giving the impression that he was more robot than man. His rimless glasses added to the severe plainness of his face. His only concession to humanity was the checkered tie held between his thin lips. He entered one of the rooms, closed the door behind him, and gave a slight cough. A broad-shouldered, middle-aged man sitting in a strongly-built arm-chair, turned slowly to look at him.

"Herr Doktor," Prinz began.
"I am Eric Rutter of Chicago. Eric P. Rutter. Always Rutter. Rutter. Do you understand?" said the other irritably.
"Yes," Prinz muttered, sulkily.
Rutter sighed and leaned back in his chair. "That is good," he said slowly. "Now then—what is it that you wanted to tell me?"
"I have some good news," Prinz announced, making an effort to recover his former elation. "As you know, the authorities search for—he hesitated—a certain man. There are placards up offering a reward for information."
Rutter frowned.
"In Marseilles," he said thoughtfully. "That means that they have unearthed some trail leading in this direction." He looked up sharply. "Good news, Prinz? Why?"

"It is very good," Prinz said complacently. "When one looks for a missing man a description is very necessary. This man parts his hair neatly in the middle. I observe that yours has no special parting, and there is a baldish patch."
Rutter passed his hand lightly over his head.
"It begins to grow again," he muttered.
"Clean shaven. Your neatly-trimmed beard has a solid appearance, as though it has been in existence for many years."
"So the official description dates back to the days before the bombing—before the injuries to the eyes.

That is good, Prinz. Yes, you are right," He smiled. "It is not often you are right, is it? But this time... yes, you are right."
"You can see for yourself," said Prinz eagerly, producing the poster which he had kept out of sight until this moment. If he hoped for more praise he was disappointed. Rutter leap up from his chair and for a moment seemed about to strike him. For a minute or two the men faced each other, Rutter shaking with rage, Prinz inwardly trembling but outwardly as stiff as ever.
Then Rutter turned away with a shrug of his shoulders.
"To think," he said, "that you should have been the one detailed to help me! Otto Prinz! What have I done in the past to merit this!" His voice rising, he continued: "Do you not understand, simpleton that in tearing down that wretched poster you have attracted attention?"

A dull colour glowed in Prinz's cheeks. His eyes glittered; but he remained silent. That he should defend himself was unthinkable. He was under orders to assist this man, to bring about his escape from Europe, to obey him. He gave a stiff little bow and murmured, "I am sorry." He was relieved when the telephone bell rang. Rutter answered the call and there was a surprising transformation in his voice. It became smooth, bland and unharmed.
