ADAM BEDE. LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

CHAPTER XXII.

'What a capital thing it is that they saved this piece of the old abbey,' said Arthur. 'If I'm ever master here, I shall do up the gallery in first-rate style; we've got no room in the house a third as large as this. The second table is for the farmer's wives and children; Mrs. Best said it would be more comfortable for the mothers and children to be by themselves. I was determined to have the children, and make a regular family thing of it. I shall be 'the old Squire' to those little lads and lasses some day, and they'll tell their children what a much finer young fellow I was than my own son. There's a table for the women and children below as well.
But you will see them all—you will come up with me after dinner, I hope?'

'Yes, to be sure,' said Mr. Irwine. 'I wouldn't miss your maiden speech to the tenantry.'

'And there will be some thing else you'll like to hear,' said Arthur. 'Let's go into the library, and I'll tell you all about it while my grandfather is in the drawing-room with the ladies. Some thing that will surprise you,' he continued, as they sat down. 'My grandfather has come round after all.'

'What, about Adam?'

'Yes; I should have ridden over to tell you about it, only I was so busy. You know I told you I had quite given up arguing the matter with him—I thought it was hopeless; but yesterday morning he asked me to come in here to him before I went out, and astonished me by saying that he had decided on all the new arrangements he should make in consequence of old Satchell being obliged to lay by work and that he intended to employ Adam in superintending the woods at a salary of a guinea a week, and the use of a pony, to be kept here. I believe the secret of it is, he saw from the first that it would be a profitable plan, but he had some particular dislike of Adam to get over—and besides, the fact that I propose a thing is generally a reason with him for rejecting it. There's the most curious contradiction with my grandfather; I know he means to leave me all the money he has saved, and he is likely enough to have cut off poor Aunt Lydia, who has been a slave to him all her life, with only five hundred a year, for the sake of giving me all the more; and yet I sometimes think he positively hates me because I'm his heir. I believe if I were to break my neck he would feel it the greatest misfortune that could befall him, and yet it seems a pleasure to him to make my life a series of petty annoyances.'

'Ah, my boy, it is not only a woman's love that is an aneproc epoc, as old Æschylus calls it. There's plenty of 'unloving love' in the world of a masculine kind. But tell me about Adam. Has he accepted the post? I don't see that it can be much more profitable than his present work, though, to be sure, it will leave him with a good deal of time on his own hands.'

'Well, I felt some doubt about it when I spoke to him, and he seemed to hesitate at first. His objection was that he thought he should not be able to satisfy my grandfather. But I begged him as a personal favor to me not to let any reason prevent him from accepting the place, if he really liked the employment, and would not be giving up anything that was more profitable to him. And he assured me he should like it of all things; it would be a great step forward for him in business, and it would enable him to do what he had long wished to do—give up working for Burge. He says he shall have plenty of time to superintend a little business of his own, which he and Satchell will carry on, and will perhaps be able to enlarge by degrees. So he has agreed at last, and I have arranged that he shall dine with the large tenants to-day; and I mean to announce the appointment to them, and to ask them to drink Adam's health. It's a little drama I've got up in honor of my friend Adam. He's a fine fellow, and I like the opportunity of letting people know that I think so.'

'A drama in which friend Arthur piques himself on having a pretty part to play,' said Mr. Irwine, smiling. 'But when he saw Arthur color, he went on reluctantly.'

'My part, you know, is always that of the Old Fogy who sees nothing to admire in the young folks. I don't like to admit that I'm proud of my pupil when he does graceful things. But I must play the amiable old gentleman for once, and second your toast in honor of Adam. Has your grandfather yielded on the other point, too, and agreed to have a respectable man as steward?'

'Oh, no,' said Arthur, rising from his chair with an air of impatience, and walking along the room with his hands in his pockets. 'He's got some project or other about letting the Chase Farm, and bargaining for a supply of milk and butter for the house. But I ask no questions about it—it makes me too angry. I believe he means to do all the business himself, and have nothing in the shape of a steward. It's amazing what energy he has, though.'

'Well, we'll go to the ladies now,' said Mr. Irwine, rising too. 'I want to tell my mother what a splendid thing you've prepared for her under the marquee.'

'Yes, and we must be going to luncheon too,' said Arthur. 'It must be two o'clock, for there is the gong beginning to sound for the tenants' dinners.'
