A STIRRING SPEECH.

Sir John Makes an Effective Reply to Mr. Blake's Insinuations.

HE SHOWS UP THE REFORM LEADER'S COWARDLY TACTICS.

On the 21st ult., Mr. Blake made an attack upon the Government in the House of Commons in connection with the rebellion, insinuating, though not daring to charge directly, that the Government was responsible for the trouble. This attack brought forth a stirring reply from Sir John Macdonald, who was received with loud cheers. He said:—

Mr. Speaker—And this is the result of the honorable gentleman's protracted incubation! (Laughter) This carefully written essay is the result of his prolonged absence from the House! True, he has accomplished his motion for an adjournment with a number of images; true he has given us poetry and prose and has summoned the tragic to his assistance; true he has favored us with an elaborate essay on the horrors of war; but, sir, I say he has taken an ignoble course. The Government is fully aware of its responsibilities. We know that during our administration there has been an outbreak in the Northwest. We know, too, that the subject must be a matter of discussion in Parliament, and we challenge inquiry, and are ready for inquiry. (Applause) But to-day, on a motion for adjournment, the honorable gentleman suddenly issues from his rifle pit and fires his gun. (Cheers) It is an ignoble warfare; it is an Indian warfare. If I understand the motion of the honorable gentleman, it is made in order that he may make this speech. He says that whatever he may think, he does not now make any

CHARGE AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

He says that by-and-by on some other occasion he may make a charge. Well, we will wait for that charge; and, sir, we will answer it. (Applause) But I am, I think, expressing the judgment of the House, if the honorable gentleman did not to-day, though professing merely a desire to get information, insinuate throughout his whole speech that which he dare not assert. (Hear, hear) He went back to the events of 1869 and 1870, and gave elaborate details of our course at that time. He says the Government gave full information. Sir, was at the head of the Government at that time, and on my responsibility I thought it right and safe to make certain communication to the House. I thought then the time had come for producing this information; and just as then in the exercise of my discretion I thought the time had come when I should bring down the papers, so in the exercise of the same discretion I have now withheld much of the information the honorable gentleman has asked for. The honorable gentleman has asked for much he cannot get, and he has asked for much that he will get, and, sir, if there is delay in bringing down the papers he can get it is due to the continued and senseless (if I may use the word without offence), at all events the useless encumbrance of every department with motions for papers of various kinds. There are a great many papers that the government refuses to bring down, on the ground that to do so would be against the best interests of the country. The honorable gentleman insinuates that the colonization companies have done something wrong. He insinuates, but does not say, that the Indians have been ill-used, and he desires to lead this House to believe what he cannot lead it to believe (for it will not be deceived), that the government is responsible and that it has failed in its duty. Let the honorable gentleman bring his specific and distinct charge. I care not whether he charges harshness, want of judgment or delay; we are ready to meet him. (Applause) But, sir, let him not spring speeches of this kind upon us in this way. Do you think Mr. Gladstone would have sprung such a motion upon his opponents. Why, I heard this morning that the gentleman who fetches and carries for the honorable gentleman went to the press and said: "Prepare, there is going to be a great speech to-day from Mr. Blake." When he was asked what it was to be about, he said: "O, that is a different thing; only be ready for a great speech." And why was there this secrecy as to the subject of the speech? It was that we should not know what the speech was to be about or what course the honorable gentleman would take. (Hear, hear) I asked if an honorable gentleman on that side did not go to the press and speak as I have indicated. The honorable gentleman says we ought to have brought down the reports of missionaries, of agents, and all the various officers of the government in that country on the subject of the troubles and lay them before the House. Why Riel was only taken the other day, at this moment at this moment he may have a large force behind him; at the moment there may be white lives at the mercy of the half-breeds, and despite this, we are to bring down all the statements of the clergy. We will bring them down by and by—all the statements of agents, and all the statements of officers whose lives may be forfeited by the present publication of such documents. (Cheers) The missionaries there have no families, but they have their lives. (Applause) Fathers there who have had communications with the government have their own lives and those of their wives and children at the mercy of the yet unsubdued hands. The honorable gentleman moreover says that although the half-breed rebellion may be considered as put down there is a long Indian war before us. Suppose that is true. I hope it is not. Suppose too we have no more trouble directly with the half-breeds under arms, we know that the half-breeds have aroused the Indians who have no cause for complaint, who have no grievances in the world, to warfare, and do you think that these men crushed down, their friends killed, their leaders in trouble and they suffering the hardships of a suppressed rebellion, do you think that they will refrain from

DUMONT IS FREE;

INCITING THE INDIANS TO WAR, and that they will not call upon them to avenge their fancied wrongs? Until that Indian war is over—until the country is quiet—it would be madness—it would be cruelty—on the part of any government to place weapons in the hands of these men by publishing prematurely papers of the kind the honorable gentleman demands. (Hear, hear) Why does the honorable gentleman demand these papers? If I could believe that the honorable gentleman was actuated by a sincere and honest desire to cure the evils of administration, or if I thought he was anxious to impress upon the public the necessity for a new system, I would say he was quite right; but I know, and the country knows, that from his first utterance since the troubles commenced until to-day he has simply been trying to get a miserable party triumph. (Hear, hear) We have loyally endeavored to suppress the causeless outbreak. The country will say we have loyally tried to put it down. (Hear, hear) But the honorable gentleman attempted to get at a time when he should have rallied round the government, no matter who administered it. He put motions and questions and made speeches, not for the purpose of protecting the men and the defenceless women and children of the Northwest, nor with a view to staying the flow of blood, but for the sole purpose of bringing discredit upon those to whom he is opposed. (Hear, hear) The country knows that I am an old parliamentarian; my experience doth attain to something like prophetic strain, and I tell him that he has not improved his position by the use he
