From Kidney Disease Prevented by Dodd's Kidney Pills, Only.

"Kidney Disease." Do you know what it means? It means that the kidneys are either rotten, or rotting; the blood is full of poisonous, death-dealing corruption; that the kidneys can't do their work; that the victim is a walking charnel-house; that his hours are numbered; that the victim must take Dodd's Kidney Pills if he does not want to die.

Have you Kidney Disease? Is your skin hot and dry; memory failing; breath short; urine, reddish, or pale colored; does it scald when passing; is your appetite changeable; do your ankles swell; have you bitter taste in the mouth on getting up mornings; is there a brick-dust deposit in your urine?

Any of these signs is proof positive of Kidney Disease. Will you be cured, or will you die? Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only means on earth that will cure you. They never fail.

"Yes," he said, slowly, "with proper nursing," adding under his breath, as he studied the wee little pink hand intently he held in his own; "perhaps it would be better for her if she did not."

Nella's quick ear had caught the words. "What do you see in the baby's hand that should make you think that?" she cried, with a shudder.

He pointed to two lines like the veins of a roseleaf in the tiny palm.

"Those are uncommon," he answered, thoughtfully. "Not one child in ten thousand has them. Heaven forbid that they should."

"Why?" asked Nella, turning pale.

"They portend a strange destiny. I do not like to prophesy, but I tell you that the child lying here will have an extraordinary life—a wonderful destiny. I am no seer to peer into the veiled mysteries of the future—no man has that power—but this is no mere opinion of imagination; it is reading aright the lines of true science as I find them here.

A great genius carries the stamp of it on his face. No careful reader of human nature fails to detect the ideal face of artist and poet when one meets them, or the noble brow of a great soldier. As some people make a study of human hands, and I find plainly enough just what I have told you written upon this one. Yes, hanging over this little head is a black shadow. Heaven grant that it may not obscure the sunshine of her life."

Mark Sefton listened in wonder to the strange story Nella told him after the doctor took his departure; nor did he demur when she informed him of the vow she had made the dying mother to rear the child as her own.

A portmanteau, containing a little more than a thousand dollars, was found upon the dead woman's person. This Nella solemnly declared, should go for the education of the child she had left—every cent.

The marriage ring she had worn had the name Uldene engraved in it; and by this name the child was christened—Uldene Sefton. And both Mark and Nella grew to love the little waif quite as fondly as they loved their own little flaxen-haired Verlie.

Sixteen years passed by, bringing little change to the inhabitants of the isolated island of Black-Tor Light-House, save to expand the two infants into wondrously beautiful young girls.

Verlie was fair of face, with tender, deep, blue eyes, and hair like golden sunshine. And Uldene—ah, how shall I find words to describe the dark, wondrous, glowing beauty of peerless Uldene? the young girl whose life held so tragic a story! Her face was dark, piquant, and dimpled, with rounded cheeks and curved lips as crimson as the heart of a glowing wild rose; great dark, velvety, Oriental eyes, shaded by the longest and darkest of lashes; a low broad brow, crowned with rings of curling love-locks, darker than a raven's plume, and a saucy, smiling mouth, that seemed made only for rippling laughter.

Verlie was of a quiet, retiring temperament, sweet and good. Uldene—gay, restless, piquant Uldene, was full of faults; at once the torment and darling of the light-house. No human being could hold in subjection the fiery, un-is death in the embrace of love, and the first touch of baby-fingers is succeeded by the chilly grasp of the grim destroyer. If wives and mothers would only resort to the right remedy when they suffer from weakness and disease of the delicate and important feminine organs that are baby's threshold to life, there would be fewer husbands bereft, and fewer homes saddened by an infant's loss. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes the feminine organs strong, healthy and vigorous. It fits for wifely and motherhood. It banishes the maladies of the period of suspense, and makes baby's entry to the world easy and comparatively painless. An honest druggist will not try to induce a customer to take an inferior substitute for this great remedy, for the sake of extra profit.

Mrs. Seagle was a great sufferer from a combination of female diseases, a few years ago, from which she has been entirely cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription," writes Geo. A. Seagle, Esq., of Box 110, Wytheville, Va. "I am thoroughly convinced that there is no medicine on earth equal to the 'Favorite Prescription,' and she doesn't hesitate to say so. She has recommended it to her lady friends, and in all cases, where it has been given a fair trial, it has given entire satisfaction."

In cases of constipation and torpid liver, no remedy is equal to Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They regulate and invigorate the stomach, liver and bowels. They never fail. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative and two a mild cathartic. They never gripe. An honest dealer will not urge a substitute upon you.

temed spirit of the wilful little beauty, and her moods were as changeable as April storms and sunshine.

She had been sent to boarding-schools without number, but she never succeeded in staying a month at any one of them. Mark Sefton was always sent for in urgent haste, and was always met with the words:

"We are sorry, sir, but we cannot keep the young lady here; she revolutionizes the whole school, and incites the rest of the scholars to mischief and rebellion."

Mark was in despair, yet how could he scold her, with those soft, white arms clinging to his neck, and the girl's merry, pealing laughter ringing in his ears, and her mischievous face trying to look punitively up into his?

"I have no trouble whatever with Verlie," he declared; "but you, Uldene—what in Heaven's name am I to do with you?"

"Take me away from school; I know enough already," she declared, "and let me throw those old stupid books into the sea. I'd rather read Shakespeare, with such sweet romances as Romeo and Juliet in it, or thrilling adventures, like the Arabian Nights, and—"

"Hush! hush!" cut in Mark, with a shudder. "You should think more of entering a convent than hungering after the light pleasures of this world."

He had remembered suddenly the fatal sentence, that had not occurred to him for long years: "She must never love, for she must never marry." He tried to speak, but the words died away on his lips.

"A convent, indeed! Ha, ha, ha! This is really too much!"

A little hand, white as a lily leaf, had come down suddenly over his mouth, and a saucy, gay young voice trilled out shrilly in his ear:

"Oh! I can't be a nun; I won't be a nun; I'm too fond of pleasures; I could never be a nun."

"There's no use of talking, Papa Sefton," declared Uldene. "I shall not go to school any more. I warn you, and promise you, I shall run away at the first opportunity. You might as well think of shutting up a skylark in the four walls of a cage as to shut me up in the four walls of a school-room."

"What will your mother say to bringing you home in disgrace, Uldene?" he said, abruptly. "Remember this is the twentieth time; and now you have exhausted every boarding-school in the state."

"Hest assured she has been expecting me," declared Uldene, complacently. "Thirty days is my limit in any school; and as for being in disgrace, that's nothing new. Just think of the old cat ordering us up to our dormitory at eight o'clock, sharp, and every light to be out, and us snug in our beds before the next quarter-hour struck, and on All-Hallow Eve at that. I'm not sorry that I put a sleeping potion in madame's tea, and that at midnight every girl in the school crept out to the moonlit lawn. Oh! we had a rousing time, so what does it matter if I am sent home in disgrace for planning it out and carrying it through?"

"But the rules of the institution should be respected and—"

"Fiddlesticks!" broke in the incorrigible, wilful beauty. "When one has to live by rule it is time to die. Ah, no; give me freedom—gayety—life;" and she stretched out her beautiful white arms as though she would fain fly away.

"What am I to do with this beautiful wild bird?" honest Mark thought, in puzzled bewilderment too great for words.

Mrs. Sefton was quite as distressed and bewildered as her husband had been, when Uldene was sent home in disgrace from the last school to which they could possibly send her. What should be done with her now?

All at once her woman's wit came to her rescue. Why not send both the girls to spend Christmas with her old friend, Mrs. Chester, in Washington?

Mrs. Chester was a senator's wife; but for all that the lady was a staunch, true friend of the Seftons.

Years ago, brave Mark Sefton had saved her only son, a bright lad of fourteen, from drowning, and the lady owed him a debt of gratitude which she told herself could never be repaid.

Mark Sefton well knew—even before he wrote her in reference to the matter—that the girls would be warmly received. In his letter he had frankly related all of Uldene's strange history, requesting that the knowledge that she was not his child should not be divulged to her as yet—until some plan for her future should be settled; for they were sorely puzzled as to the meaning of those startling words:

"She must never love, for she must never marry."

Love and marriage seemed only a fitting crown for the girl's bright life.

There was great consternation at the light-house when Mrs. Chester's reply was received and its contents made known to the two girls.

Uldene was wild with delight, and Verlie sprang from her chair with a low cry and flung her arms around her mother's neck.

"We have always been at home on Christmas, mamma," she said. "I do not think the day would be a happy one for me away from you."

HE THANKS HEAVEN

That he Used Dodd's Kidney Pills, Which Saved his Life.

Bowmanville, Jan 21.—Marvellous indeed is the case of Mr A W Gibbons, miller of this town.

Here is his story, as he himself tells it: "I couldn't eat, nor sleep; had terrible pains in my back and stomach.

"Doctors said I had Bright's Disease. But they couldn't cure me. "Thank Heaven, whether it was Bright's Disease or anyone else's, Dodd's Kidney Pills soon cured it."

"I hope the news of my cure will spread over the whole country, so that all sufferers will hear of the greatest kidney remedy in the world—Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only medicine that has ever cured Bright's Disease.
