PETER MEETS WATERFOOT

Impossible, you're apt to find, Is but a figment of the mind. —Old Mother Nature.
"Did you say something?" asked Peter Rabbit as if he had heard yet wasn't sure that he had heard. "I said that your eyes didn't fool you after all. You really did see some one," squeaked Jerry Muskrat. He was on a small mud landing near where Peter was sitting on the shore at the head of the Smiling Pool.
"On the water?" asked Peter, still staring straight ahead at the smooth, shadowy water.
"On the water," agreed Jerry. "It was Waterfoot. I had forgotten him. He really runs on the water for a short distance, and he is the only person around here who can do that. I know of I don't see him often. That is why I forgot him."
"Who is Waterfoot? That's a funny name," said Peter.
"Is it any funnier than the fact that he can walk, or at least run, on the water when no one else can?" squeaked Jerry.
"No-o," admitted Peter. "No, it isn't. If I hadn't seen it done I wouldn't believe it could be done. As it was, I had to see it twice to really believe it. I wish he would

"Are you talking about me?" asked a sharp high pitched squeaky voice. "You haven't used your eyes," said the small stranger a bit crossly. "No one enjoys being stared at as Peter was staring.
"I beg your pardon, I'm sorry," said he, which of course was the right thing to do. "Why haven't I ever seen you before?" he asked.
"You haven't used your eyes," said the other sharply. "I've been around. I've seen you. If I could see you with my tiny eyes you should have been able to see me with your big ones. But some folks never do learn to use their eyes, and that is a good thing for some of us small folks."
Just then there was a sharp sound from out in the middle of the Smiling Pool. It was the slap of Mrs. Muskrat's tail on the water. Her danger signal. Jerry plunged into the water with a great splash and a slap of his rubbery tail as he went under. Peter looked to see what had frightened Mrs. Muskrat but saw nothing. He looked down at the place where his new small acquaintance had been. There was no one there.

Contract Bridge

NO NEED TO GUESS

There is no need for a "correct guess" in the defense of such a deal as today's—all one has to do is rely on one's partner!

East dealer. North-South vulnerable.

♠ 7 7 4	♠ K Q J 10
♥ 7 2	♥ 8 6 4
♦ A K 6 3 2	♦ 8 5
♣ 10 7	♣ K Q 9 5
♠ 4 3 2	♠ A K J 10 5 2
♥ A 9	♥ Q
♦ A 8 6	♦

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
3 ♠	4 ♠	Pass	5 ♠
Pass	6 ♠	Pass	7 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass	Pass

North felt that inasmuch as he had been "forced" on the first round and had shown no particular strength, he could well afford to bid for the grand slam when South himself showed such a huge holding. Actually, South was too aggressive when, having cue-bid at the four-level, he then leaped to six spades.

West, sure that the opponents were prepared for a heart lead, tried the desperation attack of the diamond jack. (This was indeed "desperate," since East, if he had been void of diamonds, would have doubled seven spades to call for that lead!) South won with the queen, drew trumps, then discarded two clubs on dummy's high diamonds. He saw that the diamond suit could be established for an extra discard, so he then ran off the rest of his trumps hoping for a miracle.
West discarded the three and five of hearts as soon as he could—but this did not help East as it should have! When South led the last trump, East, holding the king-queen of hearts and the king-queen of clubs, had to decide which suit to unguard—and he guessed wrong. Thereupon, South cashed in the ace and nine of hearts.
East should have realized that his partner was trying to help him! West would not have discarded two hearts and kept one—he would have to let go the third heart, if he had it, to give East the "count." Thus, East should have known what to hold!

Prime Minister Speaks On Social Security

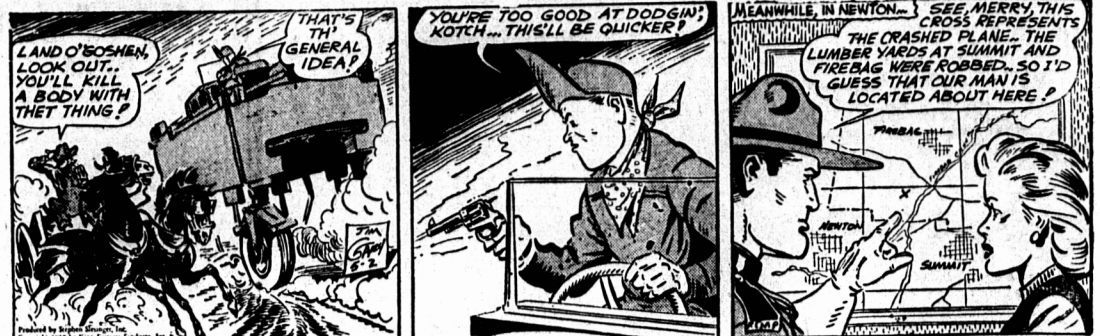

GRANBY, Que., April 30—(CP)—Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent told the Granby Chamber of Commerce Saturday that social security is the best means of preventing the Canadian citizen from being buried under an avalanche of economic pressure and hardships.
He said means had to be taken to guarantee security to the working man engaged in earning his living in industrial organizations.
Funds to provide for this social insurance had been provided by taxes which have been assessed by some people as being too severe.
