CONSTABLE AND MRS. VICTOR CAMERON RCMP Attendants Add Color To Trinity Church Ceremony

In the hushed beauty of Trinity United Church, Charlottetown on September 26 at 2:30 o'clock, Miss Mary Bonita Smallman, daughter of Mr. Roy Smallman, Charlottetown, and the late Mrs. Smallman was united in marriage with Constable Hugh Victor Cameron, son of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Cameron, Sunnybrae, Nova Scotia.

The impressive double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. A. Frank MacLean. The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore an original model gown of ivory brocade satin designed in a stately medieval style. Its classic lines made the dress a thing of beauty from its sweetheart neckline, which was emphasized by a delicate outline of guipure lace, to its superb Cathedral train. As an accent the willow young bride added a shirred white velvet cummerbund. Completing her costume and adding to the "Empire Look" was her veil of tulle illusion, embroidered in guipure lace which was complemented by a pearl and crystal coronet. Cultured pearl earrings, gift of the groom, completed her bridal ensemble.

The matron of honor, Mrs. Robert Hyndman, and the bridesmaids, Miss Marjorie MacGuire and Miss Kathryn Beck, were gowned identically in pale gold crystal charm. Their cocktail length skirts were emphasized by velvet cummerbunds in a deeper shade of gold. Matching shoes and headresses added to the gold effect, which, combined with the scarlet coats of the Mounted Police, presented a picture that was rich in pageantry.

The church decorations were carried out in white and yellow gladioli, the same color scheme was used in the pew decorations. This autumn color combination was further used by the bride in her cascade bouquet of white and yellow gladioli. The bridesmaids carried dainty short cascade bouquets of white and yellow gladioli.

ELLEN'S DIARY Most Witching Night Of Year Fills Folks With Pleasing Fear

Now indeed farm folks must thank the Lord of the Harvest for larges of field and garden-pot. For who having looked upon the adequacy, the abundance received would fail to remember how well favored he has been? We see these gifts all about: the hay heaped in mows, the wealth of the granaries, the tier on tier of baled straw; potatoes for the potato-farming filling cellars—the overflow stored shed or barn. In their bins rest the mangels and turnips—and the garden-vegetables to be a joy to the cooks. And the apples gathered in from the loved orchard trees. There too, sheltered is the smiling heap of pumpkins from which this very day, children will select their Jack O'Lanterns for this, the most witching night of the year.

Today gave us the witchery of a lovely Autumn day to close out this workaday week. Sunny blue sky, October brought, and so welcome on the heels of Winter's recent cold touch, a warm roving wind. It was ideal weather for Granddaughter to go with other maids to the potato-picking. And for all our men and lads, having completed the year's harvestings at Roby's to muster to the turnip-gathering in the interests of the Winter-stock of this farm.

They worked out of sight of the cooks but the pup's bark at intervals hailed the arrival of the saved loads to the yards and barn-cellar.

Time suffered no loafing at the chore. However, at work's close, when the dusk was commencing to lie dreamily atop the farther hills, we saw a pair of young hunters slip quietly away in search of game. These, acknowledged by their elders to be "fair—good" marksmen, returned with various trophies of the hunt. Yet even empty-handed, there is an obvious satisfaction for them in observing this hunters-moon-of-days as they stalk the farmlands about.

well with the farming." James observed at supper. "Better," he said with a twinkle "to buy yourselves a roast. It would save you time and money, and taste better than any wild game."

"But have you never heard, 'All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy?'" one queried with a chuckle.

"Heard?" James countered. "Why lad—I've forgotten more than 'what a lot young folks must learn the hard way!'"

Tonight young folks will be young. Because: "This night the ghosts and goblins prow, And witches ride the skies, And black cats steal through dusky trails, And wonder fills young eyes!"

May every youthful anticipation of the night be realized and it ever remain one of its kind, to which they may look back lovingly and unshamed in their adult years. It is a special night this—the Hallowe'en—the most witching night of the year.

Until Monday — Diary—Good-night.
