CAUTION RE FIRES
Life Safety from fire should be a most powerful incentive for correcting hazardous conditions. To a considerable extent, the same factors that make for life safety from fire also contribute towards safety of property.
I would, therefore, call your attention to the fact that you have a moral and legal responsibility for loss of life. There is also the possibility of criminal action against those responsible as well as personal danger to Owners and Managers of Business houses.
People cannot be expected to behave logically in the stress of fire conditions. Panic is contagious and the danger is greater in a large crowd, as in a place of public assembly. Fear rather than actual fire danger is the main factor in a panic. Total panics have occurred where there was no fire in a building, but the people thought that there was a fire. On the other hand, where people have had confidence that a building and its exits were properly planned, there have been orderly evacuations without panic, even though actual danger was present. Under fire conditions people are likely to try to leave a building by the same route by which they entered, neglecting alternate means of emergency exit. Emergency exits should, therefore, be conspicuously marked, and it is highly desirable to use all exits during regular operation of the building so that occupants will be familiar with them.
Now that we have our Winter Season with us again, naturally our greatest crowds are indoors. I would advise, that all patrons of sports and other entertainment, when taking their place in any building, should first make note of the Exit nearest to them. And to the Management of all places, where a large assembly of people are gathered, I would urge that you see to it that all exits are plainly marked and kept free from all obstructions.
T. A. CAMPBELL, Provincial Fire Marshal.
