WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Interesting Particulars of the Struggle Between Great Britain and the Boers.

A CANADIAN'S ESCAPE.

THRILLING ADVENTURE IN THE NIGHT.

The first man to arrive in Toronto from the seat of hostilities in Africa was Dr. F. J. Livingston. He was taken prisoner by the Boers on October 29, made a daring escape from under the rifles of his captors that night, and travelled on foot a hundred and forty miles to the nearest British post. Dr. Livingston is a dark, lean, athletic-looking man, and resembles very much Dr. Peters, major of the Body Guards. He was interviewed shortly after his arrival by a Mail and Empire reporter, to whom he told the following story.

Dr. Livingston's home is in Collingwood. He graduated from Victoria University in 1892, and from Trinity Medical school in 1894. The next year he went to Natal, and settled at Ladysmith as a Methodist medical missionary among the natives. He was self-supporting. Besides a position with the Natal Government, he built up a considerable private practice about Ladysmith, as well as carrying on his missionary work with the natives. In May, 1898, he was appointed by the Natal Government medical inspector of the Ingwavuma district in Tongaland. The district is bounded on the north by Portuguese territory, on the west by Swaziland, and on the east by the Pongolo river. It is densely populated with Zulus, but no white man has been permitted to settle there yet, although it is a very fertile county. Dr. Livingston lived with three other Europeans, the magistrate, the clerk of the court and the inspector of police. They had about 25 native police with them. They had telephone communication with Pietermaritzburg, and so were kept posted as to the progress of the difficulty between Great Britain and the Transvaal.

GOT WIND OF A RAID.

Shortly after hostilities broke out they got word of a Boer commando 300 strong assembling in Swaziland. They had out their native scouts, and early word of an intended raid on the part of this mob as a bit of diversion before proceeding south to join the forces that had already invaded Natal. On Sunday, October 29, they were informed of the Boer approach. The native police wanted to fight, but the Government's orders were to keep the natives from taking part in the war as far as possible. The doctor's three companions, deeming it impossible to stay, made off, and escaped. The doctor had travelled hundreds of miles in Swaziland to render medical aid to the families of many of the invading Boers, and he felt he was comparatively safe with them, more especially as he was altogether a non-combatant. So he proceeded more leisurely, and was engaged in an easy and orderly retreat with his medical stores when he was surprised by a party of 75 Boers, who came upon him from behind, and had their rifles levelled at him before he had any chance of evading them. That was about noon on Sunday.

The Boers took his horses, and told him to sit on the ground, and put a guard of four men with loaded rifles over him. Not content with that, they cursed him roundly for a "damn rooi neck" (red neck, a Boer name for Englishmen). This party of Boers had come round for the purpose of cutting the telephone wire. In the meantime the main body had burned all the Government buildings, including the doctors' house, looted and burned an Italian's store, and seized all the cattle they could find, and spent a good part of the afternoon looking for more.

DR. LIVINGSTON'S ESCAPE.

Towards evening the guard over the doctor was relieved, and four others were set to watch him. The company had gathered a lot of fowl and prepared themselves a fine feast. The doctor and his guard were some distance apart from the main body, and within about 75 yards of the charred ruins of his house. Early in the morning he determined to make a dash for liberty and trust to the knowledge of the locality and his strength of limb. He is considerable of an athlete. The night was very dark, and fifty yards from him were some large rocks. About midnight he suddenly sprang up and made a dash for the cover of the rocks. His guards were completely taken by surprise. They jumped up and levelled their rifles, but were too excited to be certain which way to shoot. They cried: "He's there!" "He's there!" pointing in different directions, and the doctor was enjoying the shelter of the rocks almost before they knew he was gone.

His escape created a great hubbub. He stood a moment to listen, but could make out nothing of the babel of sounds, so put off at his best speed through the mealie and corn stalks of the native gardens, and quickly gained a wood. He directed his course towards Uongoma, a considerable police post, and fearing the Boers would pursue him on horseback, he did not stop a minute until between two and three o'clock on Monday afternoon. There he got some food from the natives. From midday to midnight on Sunday the Boers had offered him neither meat nor drink. He sent for a minor Zulu chief, who got our his scouts and accompanied Dr. Livingston as far as the Pongolo river. By Monday evening the doctor had covered 70 miles.

The Pongolo was swollen and full of crocodiles, but the natives got him over in a boat, then hid the craft to keep it from the Boers. The danger of the pursuit being greatly lessened the fugitive travelled more leisurely, and arrived at his objective point early on Tuesday morning, after a jaunt of 140 miles.

From Uongoma the doctor proceeded by horses and rail to Pietermaritzburg, and offered his services as surgeon to the British forces, but about 50 European doctors had been among the fugitives from the Transvaal, and the army had more surgeons than it wanted. The doctor then took ship from Durban for home and arrived here from New York only last night.

WANTED TO SHOOT HIM.

Among the 75 Boers who captured Dr. Livingstone were ten whom he knew personally, having treated them or their families in illness, and some of them told him he would have been shot had not they interceded for him, because the officers wanted to despatch him.

Dr. Livingston during his two years and a half in Ladysmith travelled all through the country over which the opposing forces are now fighting. He has crossed the Tugela scores of times. Spion kop he told the reporter, is a ridge about five miles long, steep on the side towards the British, falling away more easily towards Ladysmith, from which it is situated about 18 miles. It is capped with a lot of kopjes or smaller hills. General Warren, he asserts, could have occupied only one end of it. Between it and Ladysmith are other ridges of hills, then there is a level tract about six miles across, and another range close to the town.

Dr. Livingston has no doubt about the ultimate outcome of the conflict but the British, he says, have a heavy contract on hand. The Boers, he said, were "really ignorant except for riding horses and handling a gun." Not one of them, he asserts, can write their own names, and he regards them as being scarcely half civilized. Many French and German officers have been training them for the present conflict.

INHERITED ASTHMA.

Suffered Since His Birth, and Found Help Only Through Clarke's Kola Compound. Now Free From Asthma.

Mr. Robert S. Taylor, New Westminster, B.C., writes:—"I have been a constant sufferer from hereditary bronchial asthma since my birth, 27 years ago. I have tried every remedy ever heard of for this trouble, and spent hundreds of dollars with doctors, but to no purpose. Clarke's Kola Compound is the only remedy that ever gave me any permanent relief. I have also gained much in weight since being cured. I can honestly recommend it to any unfortunate sufferer from asthma." All druggists sell Clarke's Kola Compound, or write the Griffiths and Macpherson Co., Limited, Toronto.
