Is It Nothing to You?

Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Is it nothing to you that the drunkard should die? Is it nothing to you that his struggles are vain, That daily the tempter adds strength to his chain? Is it nothing to you that the heart of his wife Is broken by sorrow, and hardships, and strife? Is it nothing to you that his children lack bread? Is it nothing to you that his home joys have fled? Is it nothing to you that the death dealing bowl Is destroying his body, his mind and his soul? Is it nothing to you that the wine's ruddy glow Is causing the jails of our land to overflow? Is it nothing to you that the young of our land Are surrounded by dangers on every hand? When the drink curse is painting both pulpit and pew, Oh, say, will you tell me 'tis nothing to you! Is it something to you. For aught that you know Your boy might be next to succumb to the foe: Is it something to you, for you know not the hour When one that you love may fall 'neath the power Of the serpent that coils in the depths of the bowl, Soon, soon to be crushed in its hideous fold Then up and be doing, lest deeply you rue That ever you thought 'twas nothing to you.

It is something to me, I must do what I may, The little it be for to hasten the day, When King Alcohol's throne shall totter and fall And the slave of the winecup be loosed from his thrall. It is something to you, it is something to me, And we'll pray and we'll work that our land may be free From the plague spots that rot in the light of the sun, And we will not give o'er till the victory's won. With our face to the foe we will conquer or die, It is something to us, and we will not pass by.

AN ANECDOTE OF SIR JOHN.

A subscriber living at Moosomin writes as follows: Moosomin, the gateway town of the Northwest Territories, is situated in Assiniboia on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, about fifteen miles from the Manitoba boundary, and Sir John Macdonald while passing over the road, favored the town with a visit and was welcomed with an address. After he had made a nice speech in reply and answered some questions put to him, he was about to board the train, when a man somewhat the worse of liquor forced his way through the crowd until he reached Sir John, and, tapping him on the shoulder, asked him why he did not let us have liquor in the territories. Said he: "You know, Sir John, it is not a square deal for us to be kept without liquor unless we get a permit for it when the people just fifteen miles east of us can have all they want."

By this time Sir John had reached the car, and with one hand on the railing and one foot on the car step he turned quarter round and with his usual smile said: "That's just right, my dear friend. You always keep fifteen miles from liquor and you will be all right."

The above should be the end of the anecdote, but the man did not choose to take Sir John's good advice and died of delirium tremens before a year, and was found after a long search not one hundred yards from his friend's house, on the long grass on the prairie where he had lain a week.

Lady Macdonald, the wife of the lately deceased Prime Minister of Canada, has been a total abstainer since Christmas Day, 1867. At dinner that day a guest said it was impossible for one to be a total abstainer "in society." Lady Macdonald disputed the statement, and was challenged to give up her glass of sherry at dinner. "Henceforth," she replied, "I enter the ranks of the total abstainers, and drink to our success in water."

A lady of position was some time ago passing the summer at a fashionable watering place, and there met at table Lady Macdonald. She was much surprised to find that she took no wine at any time, and at length asked, "Do you not set out wine when you entertain the Marquis of Lorne?" "Never" was the reply. "But do you not then feel that you must apologize?" "Certainly not; wine is not a natural beverage, and so should rather come in than go out with apology." This answer decided the lady to give up wine, concluding that when a British nobleman was not offended, those in her own country ought not to be, and in her home city she soon took a leading part in the temperance cause.

A convention of Catholic churches was held in Winona, Minn., last week, for the purpose of organizing a diocesan total abstinence union. The union of Winona diocese embraces twenty counties. With an ex-alderman as president, and an attorney as secretary, we hope the new union will popularize total abstinence among business men and politicians.—[The Union Signal, July 16th.]

The Baptist Young People's National Union in session in this city last week, "recognizing the temperance as the great barrier to the progress of Christ's Kingdom" put itself on record as "unalterably opposed to license in every form," and as endorsing all proper efforts for the suppression of the nefarious traffic in intoxicants, and to secure it as early a day as possible its legal prohibition throughout the United States.—[The Union Signal, Chicago, July 17.]

Written For The Examiner.

The Blessed Virgin.

(FOR THE ASSUMPTION)

Hail, Virgin Mother, ever blest! The purest of our race; The Archangel Gabriel thee confess'd, Replete with heavenly grace. What dignity with Thine compare, Of all things God hath made; Thou art that spotless Virgin fair Whom Christ Himself obeyed. All nations shall call Thee blest, The Holy Scripture says; From north to south, from east to west, Thy name's invoked with praise. Nor has it ever yet been known, As St. Bernard truly said, That anyone Thy help besought Without receiving aid. The illustrious Irenaeus the great, Whose writings testify, Calls Mary our powerful advocate Before God's throne on high. And that resplendent light of world wide fame Who ruled in Hippo's See, Our spiritual Mother Mary names Of transcendent dignity. Thus in every age and every clime, From Apostolic days, The humble Virgin's dulcet name Has sounded forth in praise. Yes, and her potent intercession sought, Whom loved our Saviour most, As the Holy Church commends and taught Since the day of Pentecost. Hence let all who wish their souls to save From Satan's wily arts, The powerful aid of the Virgin crave With pure and fervent hearts. GILMARIA. Mt. Stewart, P. E. I., Aug. 14, 1891.

Professor Robertson at Seaview.

A large and appreciative audience listened to Professor Robertson's excellent lecture on dairy-farming in the schoolhouse at Seaview on the evening of the 10th inst. The Professor, in his genial and forcible manner, outlined the advantages which would accrue therefrom, emphasizing the fact that a farmer, to be successful, must be not only a producer of raw material, but a manufacturer of that raw material into commodities suitable for food. He showed how the farmers in Ontario had prospered since they had begun to carry on dairy-farming extensively. He also remarked that our own Island was eminently well suited to this industry, producing as it does good grass, oats, vetches, etc., in abundance. He gave the ladies present some practical hints as to the taking care of the cream, and as to the manner of churning and making butter. Certain questions which were asked, relative to the best food for milk cows, the best breeds for milk and the probability of finding a market for all the butter which would be produced were his suggestions to be followed were answered to the satisfaction of all. The Professor strongly advised the farmers to establish creameries and cheese factories on the co-operative principle, confidently predicting the success of such a movement. William Campbell, M. L. C., occupied the chair. The Hon. Peter Sinclair was present and addressed the meeting at the close of the lecture. The audience consisted largely of the most intelligent and successful farmers of New London and the surrounding districts. A unanimous vote of thanks was tendered to the lecturer and the meeting dispersed. "Then homeward each took off his several way," to dream of the palmy days in store for them through the instrumentality of the humble and hitherto unappreciated cow.—Com. (Patriot please copy.)

From Harper's Weekly.

The long illness of Mr. Spurgeon has served to furnish another illustration of the relaxing of mere sectarian bonds. Mr. Gladstone's very warm letter of sympathy has been published, and the wife and daughters of the Archbishop of Canterbury have called to enquire about the health of the arch non-conformist. These are pleasant incidents, because the moment that differences of religious belief are regarded as but honest differences of opinion, and are not deprecated and denounced as imperilling the soul's salvation, the kingdom of heaven is visibly nearer.

It is this feeling which interprets the late ecclesiastical discussions in this country. The public mind refuses to admit that recitade of life and intellectual honesty and spiritual aims are not as essential elements of religion as uniformity of speculative opinion or dogma. Without denying that harmony of view may be essential to ecclesiastical co-operation, the good sense of the community holds such co-operation to be wholly independent of the vital religious spirit. To speak of Bishop Brooks as a "dangerous" preacher is to talk nonsense, if the phrase means danger in the essence of religion.

In an old fashioned country community in which there might be two or three different churches when there should have been but one, it was generally true that the members of each differed more warmly as sectaries than they agreed as christians. As christians they could not differ about the essential faith. Their divergence was about non-essential forms or dogmas of faith. The wars and persecutions and burnings and unspes-ble crimes against God and man that have been wrought in the name of religion have been disputes of such forms and dogmas. But when Torquemada inquires tenderly for the health of a Jew, the millennium is at hand.

He put 16 lb. shot 46 feet one-half inch, beating the record by an inch and a half; and the 21 lb. shot 39 feet 1 1/2 inches, beating the record by a foot and half an inch.
