

BEDTIME STORIES

The Listeners

By Thornton W. Burgess

There's a time for talking if you will, and a time for keeping very still.

High up in a tall pine tree over in the Green Forest, not far from the pond of Paddy the Beaver, was the nest of two who, for their size, were among the fiercest of all the Green Forest folk.

Mr. and Mrs. Stubwing had a large and very comfortable nest, for they were good homemakers.

"Listen, my dear," said Stubwing.

Mrs. Stubwing listened. Not so far away but that they could hear it clearly there seemed to be a great fuss going on.

"Chatterer has lost his temper," said Stubwing. "It seems so by the sound," replied Mrs. Stubwing.

"Chatterer is scolding harder and harder. It sounds as if he is quite beside himself," said Stubwing.

"It sounds that way," agreed Mrs. Stubwing. "Do you think the children would like a squirrel dinner?" asked Stubwing.

"That's a foolish question," replied Mrs. Stubwing. "They would like anything you can catch. Such appetites! It seems to me as if they never do have enough.
