

Assassination by Silence.

HOW A FRENCH DUKE WORRIED HIS WIFE TO DEATH BY A NEW STYLE OF CRUELTY.

"Assassination by silence," is the latest Gallicism. It was the verdict of medical men and of society in the case of a French woman recently deceased; and the coroner's jury would probably have rendered the same verdict if the case had not been kept from the coroner. Noble by birth she was, and very rich; but she was hopelessly plain, ugly of feature, and hump-backed. Her husband, a Duke, married her for her money and hated her for her ugliness. A fortnight after her wedding her martyrdom began, but not as other conjugal martyrdoms have done. The duke lavished attention on her in public; he was affectionate before her servants; it was "darling" and "beloved" and "my little cat"—when any one was present; but in private changed, and only one old nurse was in the secret. He pretended to be jealous of her, and so played the Othello. He had the hinges of all the doors so carefully oiled that they could be opened without a creak, the domestics were trained to move about noiselessly, snares were set in the vast gardens of their hotel so that never the chirp of the sparrow was heard. The poor woman was forced to live in the midst of silence, and when they went together into society he scowled so fearfully at everyone who approached his wife to speak to her that little by little people ceased to make the effort. And then after they returned, and she had gone to bed, he would enter with list shoes on his feet, so as not to announce his coming, and would stimulate a scene of jealousy. That is to say, he would pace up and down like one in a fury who is about to burst into reproaches; words of anger would seem on the point of issuing from his mouth; then he would stop by the bedside and raise his hand in threat, but he never struck, he never spoke, and, resuming his walk, would go through the same scene over and over again until, overcome by fatigue and horror, the Duchess swooned. Every night for ten years his victim watched for menaces which he seemed about to proffer, but to which he never gave vent. The doctors were summoned at last, but the utmost they could say was that they were in the presence of some horrible mystery which could not be fathomed without killing the husband. And when the poor woman died and the old nurse told her story they rendered the verdict above recorded.

Another Paper Gone Up.

Three years ago Detroit had about fifty amateur weeklies in full blast. One by one they have succumbed to the chicken pox, measles, whooping cough and hard times, and the number yet alive can now be counted on the fingers of the left hand. The latest failure occurred yesterday just after the bells had struck one o'clock. An ambitious, persevering boy of twenty-two had established the Twilight in a little second floor back room beyond the parks on Woodward avenue. In his issue of twenty-three copies in the forenoon occurred the following item:—

NOTICE—There is a Read-headed Woman in THIS SIXTY who LICKS her Children with the stove handle. Let her beWair or We shall publish Her name.

The editor of the Twilight was seated in his sanctum at the hour named when a female entered. She hadn't come to subscribe. She wasn't there to have a funeral notice published. She didn't look like the president of a female sewing society. No one could read her errand until she had locked the door. Then she kicked the press over, upset the standing galley, knocked the legs from under the editorial table, and laid hands on the editor. Being taken by surprise, he did not realize what was going on until he had been shaken out of his boots and jammed into the wood box head first, and ere he had regained his editorial composure the assailant had fled. Ruin and desolation brooded there. Havoc and disaster sailed around the room. The red-headed woman who licks her children with the stove handle had played smash and left nothing to begin anew on. No insurance, and no more Twilight.
