

Business $ociety THE RETURN OF THE GREAT B.S. COLUMN

Well, believe it or not, we're back in the paper. Those of you who anxiously await each week's edition of the Sun JUST to read this column, must have really suffered through the last two weeks. Internal disagreements between certain members of the Sun staff as to what should be contained in this column caused me to believe that we were better off staying as far away from the paper as possible. The controversy centred around the fact that I try to write the column FOR BUSINESS STUDENTS (not really too surprising, considering the fact that the title at the top of the page says Business Society). The editor of this worthy publication felt that, instead of writing about things which would be of interest to a group of students which make up approximately one third of the total enrollment of this university, I should try to appeal to students of universities which belong to the Canadian University Press. Because I personally don't give a damn what they do, I assume they feel the same way about us and therefore I refused to comply. Just as a matter of interest - some suggested topics for this column were financial management, banking, and a few other equally stimulating subjects. I aim to please - if you really want to read that stuff in all your textbooks AS WELL AS in this column, let me know - and I'll see that you get psychiatric care.

So much for the soapbox routine - on to current business (please excuse the pun)

Needless to say, any of the brave few who dropped in to the party at the end of October can attest to the fact that it was not exactly the social event of the season. To be blunt - it bombed. That evening marked a sad moment in our history - it is the first time that a UPEI Bus. Soc. party has ever really stunk (stank?) (stinked?). We have decided to blame the poor attendance on the fact that midterms and projects have been driving us all insane. We will leave it at that. We can only tell you that the next party, near the end of this month will feature chugging teams and GREAT door prizes. More about these later.

On to more pleasant news. After a poor start, the Bus. Society jacket sales finally caught on, and we have just sent in our order for more than 80 jackets. We know that once they start to show up around campus, we'll be deluged with requests for more, so we plan to take orders again in January. We will also reorder those nifty little red, white and black numbers (shirts) with the new crest.

By the way, the Executive would like to take this opportunity to pass out a few thank you's - To the Ravishing Redhead Ron Collins and Able Seaman Ivan Kilpatrick - thank you for ordering a jacket. To the Bearded Wonder Gordon Bond and our own Boy Wonder Walter Isenor - who needs you? and HA HA HA - 80 people think that black is beautiful. Also thanks to Gus Gaudet and Kevin Murphy for ruining our clean-cut image, verbally intimidating several female business students AND for doing such a great selling job on the jackets.

Just a note before I close - rumour around the pub this week has it that the Business intramural hockey team is going to be absolutely unbeatable this year - it doesn't surprise me in the least and it's nice that our full potential is finally being realized.

Well that's it for now (Engineers please note - I haven't made one insulting crack - I'm saving them all for next week.) Barring any new editorial brain-storms, tune in next week for more of the same.
