ADAM BEDE.

CHAPTER XXVII.

He stood like an immovable obstacle against which no pressure could avail; an embodiment of that Arthur most shrank from believing in—the irrevocableness of his own wrong doing. The words of scorn, the refusal to shake hands, the mastery asserted over him in their last conversation in the Hermitage—above all, the sense of having been knocked down, in which a man does not very well reconcile himself, even under the most heroic circumstances—pressed on him with a galling pain which was stronger than compunction. Arthur would so gladly have persuaded himself that he had done no harm. And if no one had told him the contrary, he could have persuaded himself so much better. Nemesis can seldom forge a sword for himself out of our conscience—out of the suffering we feel in the suffering we may have caused; there is rarely metal enough there to make an effective weapon. Our moral sense learns the manners of good society, and smiles when others smile; but when some rude person gives rough names to our actions, she is apt to take part against us. And so it was with Arthur; Adam's judgment of him, Adam's grating words, disturbed his self-soothing arguments.

Not that Arthur had been at ease before Adam's discovery. Struggles and resolves had transformed themselves into compunction and anxiety. He was distressed for Hetty's sake, and distressed for his own, that he must leave her behind. He had always, both in making and breaking resolutions, looked beyond his passion, and seen that it must speedily end in separation; but his nature was too ardent and tender for him not to suffer at this parting; and on Hetty's account he was filled with tenderness. He had found out the dream in which she was living—she was to be a lady in silks and satins; and when he had first talked to her about going away, she had asked him tremblingly to let her go with him and be married. It was his painful knowledge of this which had given the most exasperating sting to Adam's reproaches. He had said no word with the purpose of deceiving her, her vision was all span by her own childish fancy; but he was obliged to confess to himself that it was span half out of his own actions. And to increase the mischief, on this last evening he had not dared to hint the truth to Hetty; he had been obliged to soothe her with tender, hopeful words, lest he should throw her into violent distress. He felt the situation acutely; felt the sorrow of the dear thing in the present, and thought with a darker anxiety of the tenacity which her feelings might have in the future. That was the one sharp point which pressed against him; every other he could evade by hopeful self-persuasion. The whole thing had been secret; the Poyzers had not the shadow of a suspicion. No one except Adam knew anything of what had passed—no one was likely to know; for Arthur had impressed on Hetty that it would be fatal to betray, by word or look, that there had been the least intimacy between them; and Adam who knew half their secret, would rather help them to keep it than betray it. It was an unfortunate business altogether, but there was no use in making it worse than it was, by imaginary exaggerations and forebodings of evil that might never come. The temporary sadness of Hetty was the worst consequence that was not demonstrably inevitable. But—but Hetty might have had the trouble in some other way if not in this. And, perhaps, hereafter he might be able to do a great deal for her, and make up to her for all the tears she would shed about him. She would owe the advantage of his care for her in future years to the sorrow she had incurred now. So good comes out of evil. Such is the beautiful arrangement of things!

Are you inclined to ask whether this can be the same Arthur who, two months ago, had the freshness of feeling, that delicate honor which shrinks from wounding even a sentiment, and does not contemplate any more positive offense as possible for it?—who thought that his own self-respect was a higher tribunal than any external opinion? The same, I assure you; only on different conditions. Our deeds determine us as much as we determine our deeds; and until we know what has been or will be the peculiar combination of outward with inward facts, which constitute a man's critical actions, it will be better not to think ourselves wise about his character. There is a terrible coercion in our deeds which may at first turn the honest man into a deceiver, and then reconcile him to the change; for this reason—that the second wrong presents itself to him in the guise of the only practicable right. The action which before commission has been seen with that blended common-sense and fresh untarnished feeling which is the healthy eye of the soul is looked at afterward with the lens of apologetic ingenuity, through which all things that men call beautiful and ugly are seen to be made up of textures very much alike. Europe adjusts itself to a fait accompli, and so does an individual character—until the placid adjustment is disturbed by a convulsive retribution.

No man can escape this vitiating effect of an offense against his own sentiment of right, and the effect was the stronger in Arthur because of that very need of self-respect which, while his conscience was still at ease, was one of his best safeguards. Self-accusation was too painful to him—he could not face it. He must persuade himself that he had not been very much to blame; he began even to pity himself for the necessity he was under of deceiving Adam; it was a course so opposed to the honesty of his own nature. But then it was the only right thing to do.

Well, whatever had been amiss in him, he was miserable enough in consequence of miserable about Hetty; miserable about this letter that he had promised to write, and that seemed at one moment a gross barbarity, at another perhaps the greatest kindness he could do to her. And across all this reflection would dart every now and then a sudden impulse of passionate defiance toward all consequences; he would carry Hetty away, and all other considerations might go to—

In this state of mind the four walls of his room made an intolerable prison to him; they seemed to hem in and press down upon him all the crowd of contradictory thoughts and conflicting feelings, some of which would fly away in the open air. He had only an hour or two to make up his mind in, and he must get clear and calm. Once on Meg's back, in the fresh air of that fine morning, he should be more master of the situation.

Meeting at Tignish.

Pursuant to notice, a public meeting was held in Saint Mary's Hall, Tignish, on Friday the 27th inst., for the purpose of taking into consideration, the question of Winter Communication between this Island and the Mainland. Hon. S. F. Perry presided, and the undersigned consented to act as Secretary.

The chairman having called the meeting to order, said he hoped the question would be approached in a non-partisan spirit, as it behooved parties of all shades of political opinion to join together and insist on the General Government fulfilling the terms of Union, and also in demanding compensation for the time during which the terms have not been fulfilled. The loss to the trade to the Island, owing to our inability to prosecute the winter fishery, and other ways of trade, owing to inefficient communication, has assumed serious proportions, and demand our earnest consideration; and no money consideration in the future will be sufficient to compensate for past neglect to carry out the terms of Union.

E. O'Connor, Esq., then moved, and Mr. James Christopher seconded, the following resolutions:—
Whereas, By the terms of confederation entered into between this Province and the Dominion of Canada, the General Government became bound "to establish and maintain efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers between this island and the mainland, winter and summer, thus placing the Island in continuous communication with the Railway system of the Dominion;" and
Whereas, The Government of this Province has from time to time addressed the Governor-General of Canada in Council, calling attention to the fact that the General Government has failed to carry out the most important condition of the compact and that Prince Edward Island entered the confederation of the Dominion of Canada; and
Whereas, Nearly twelve years have elapsed since this Province has joined the Dominion of Canada, yet no successful attempt has been made by the General Government to carry out said terms of Union; and
Whereas, The sad and lamentable accident which has taken place lately crossing at the Capes by which many have lost limbs, and very nearly lost their lives, shows the terrible hardships and dangers to which both crews and passengers are exposed by the present inefficient system of winter communication; therefore
Resolved, That this meeting insists upon the immediate fulfillment of the Dominion Government of the part of the Terms of Confederation which relates to communication between this Island and the Mainland, and that the Dominion fully compensate this Province for the time during which these terms have not been fulfilled.

Moved by A. F. Larkin, seconded by E. Gallant:
Resolved, That a copy of the above resolutions be forwarded to the Secretary of State of Canada, and also to the members for this Province in the Dominion House of Commons, with a request to bring the grievances therein contained before the Dominion Parliament, and the foregoing resolutions be published in all the leading newspapers of this Province.

Hon. B. Rogers, M. L. C., being called upon, thought it difficult not to find fault politically. The late Government had made some effort to carry out the terms by providing the Northern Light, but the present Government had done nothing. He thought it would be no trouble for science to invent means to keep up steam communication. Improvements had gone on in other directions, but the crossing at the Capes was no improvement on the mode of thirty years ago.

Mr. J. F. White said the resolutions did not go far enough. We should dictate, and not beg. We did not go cap-in-hand to the Dominion, we were forced into Confederation. If the Dominion were not to keep to the terms, we should not keep our side of the bargain. The Government spent 100 millions in British Columbia. We should threaten secession, like British Columbia, and do so if the terms are not fulfilled. We should demand this as our rights—not beg.

Dr. O'Leary remarked that he was in sympathy with the meeting. He considered the West Point to Richibucto route the more open and best, although a little longer. All points should be tried until the right place is found. Did not blame the boatmen—blames the Government. Thought a vote of censure should be passed on both Governments as they were equally to blame.

The resolutions were then put to the meeting and carried unanimously. The meeting then adjourned.
