The Two Gates.

A pilgrim once (so runs an ancient tale),
Old, worn, and spent, crept down a shadowed vale;
On either hand rose mountains bleak and high;
Chill was the gusty air, and dark the sky;
The path was rugged, and his feet were bare;
His faded cheek was seamed by pain and care;
His heavy eyes upon the ground were cast,
And every step seemed feebler than the last.

The valley ended where a naked rock
Rose sheer from earth to heaven, as if to mock
The pilgrim who had crept that toilsome way;
But while his dim and weary eyes essay
To find an outlet, in the mountain side,
A ponderous sculptured brazen door he spied,
And tottering toward it with fast-failing breath,
Above the portal read, "THE GATE OF DEATH."

He could not stay his feet, that led thereto;
It yielded to his touch, and passing through,
He came into a world all bright and fair;
Blue were the heavens, and balmy was the air;
And, lo! the blood of youth was in his veins,
And he was clad in robes that held no stains
Of his long pilgrimage. Amazed, he turned;
Behold! a golden door behind him burned.
Now lustreful and clear as those new skies,
Free from the mists of age, of care, and strife,
Above the portal read, "THE GATE OF LIFE."

Mrs. Garfield on Women's Duties.

The late number of the "Student," a little paper published by the students of Hiram College, quotes an extract from a letter written by Mrs. Garfield to her husband over ten years ago, and intended for no eye but his. It fell into the hands of President Hinsdale, who made use of it in a lecture to the students, and, as it showed the qualities of Mrs. Garfield's mind, and her opinions upon the subject of women's work, he gave it to the students. The extract is as follows:—"I am glad to tell that out of all the toil and disappointment of the summer just ended, I have risen up to victory; that silence of thought since you have been away has won for my spirit a triumph. I read something like this the other day—'There is no healthy thought without labor, and thought makes the labor happy.' Perhaps this is the way I have been able to climb up higher. It came to me one morning when I was making bread. I said to myself, 'Here I am, compelled by an inevitable necessity to make our bread this summer.' Why not consider it a pleasant occupation, and make it so by trying to see what perfect bread I can make? It seemed like an inspiration, and the whole of life grew brighter. The very sunshine seemed flowing down through my spirit into the white loaves, and now I believe my table is furnished with better bread than ever before; and this truth, old as creation, seems just now to have become fully mine—that I need not be the shrinking slave of toil, but its regal master, making whatever I do yield me its best fruits. You have been king of your work so long that maybe you will laugh at me for having lived so long without my crown, but I am too glad to have found it at all to be entirely disconcerted even by your merriment. Now, I wonder if right here does not lie the "terrible wrong," or at least some of it, of which the women suffragists complain. The wrongly educated woman thinks her duties a disgrace, and frets under them or shirks them if she can. She sees man triumphantly pursuing his vocations, and thinks it is that kind of work he does which makes him grand and regnant; whereas it is not the kind of work at all, but the way in which and the spirit with which he does it."

Suspicious Symptoms.

A minister who was perhaps not too careful in his habits was induced by his friends to take the teetotal pledge. His health appeared to suffer, and his doctor ordered him to take one glass of punch daily.
"Oh!" said he, "I dare not. Peggy, my old housekeeper, would tell the whole parish."
"When do you shave?" the doctor asked.
"In the morning."
"Then," said the doctor, "shave at night; and when Peggy brings you up your hot water, you can take your glass of punch just before going to bed."
The minister afterward appeared to improve in health and spirits. The doctor met Peggy soon after, and said,
"I am glad to hear, Peggy, that your master is better."
"Indeed, sir, he's better, but his brain's affected; there's something wrong w' his mind."
"How?"
"Why, doctor, he used to shave at night before going to bed, but now he shaves in the morn, he shaves before dinner, he shaves after dinner, he shaves at night—he's aye shavin'."
The symptoms were, indeed, very suspicious.—EDITOR'S DRAWER, in Harper's Magazine for December.

How Milton Came to Write "Paradise Regained."

It was at the time of the Great Plague that the poet of "Paradise Lost" took up his abode at Chalfont, and it was through the instrumentality of a common friend of his and William Penn's that this retreat was selected. Thomas Ellwood, the Quaker, had made Milton's acquaintance in London some years before, when hunted out of house by the Bucks justices, and read Latin to him in his lodging in Jewin Street. When the plague grew fierce in the city the blind poet bethought him of his one-time secretary, and asked him to find him some retreat in his neighborhood. Ellwood took this "pretty box" for him; and it was here that he suggested to him the idea of "Paradise Regained." Milton had handed him the manuscript of "Paradise Lost" to pass his judgement on. "I pleasantly said to him," Ellwood relates his Life, "Thou hast said much here of Paradise lost, but what hast thou to say of Paradise found? He made me no answer, but at some time in mose; then broke off that discourse and fell upon another subject. After the sickness was over, and the city well cleansed, he returned thither; and when afterward I went to wait on him there, he showed me his second poem called "Paradise Regained," and in a pleasant tone said to me, 'This is owing to you, for you put it into my head by the question you put to me at Chalfont, which before I had not thought of.'"—ALFRED T. STORY, in Harper's Magazine for December.

NEWS NOTES.

Corn can be made to go a great deal farther by grinding before feeding. The gain by adopting this plan will much more than pay for the trouble if any quantity of stock is fed.

Mr. J. W. Borden, of upwards of twenty years postmaster at Canuing, N.S., died at his home last Friday, and twelve hours later his wife also died. They were aged respectively seventy-five and sixty-nine years.

A Glasgow policeman has fallen heir to £30,000. The money was gathered together by a cranky old Scot in South Carolina. He had a family of daughters but refused to leave them a dollar because they did not or would not marry Highland men.

According to the Sheffield, Eng., "Daily Telegraph," a gardener, who had become blind owing to a cataract, dreamed that if he applied petroleum to his eyes the sight would be restored. The old man (he is 82) strong in his simple faith, carried the dream into effect and his sight was restored.

Rumors of a tailed race of men living in the interior of Borneo have often been heard, though probably no one seriously believed them. Carl Beck, a recent traveller in Borneo, was, however, assured by some of his native companions that such a race really did exist in the interior, somewhere about the upper course of the Barita.

Mr. Daniel Grant, Liberal member of Parliament for Marylebone, speaking at a large meeting in London, on November 9th, declared, amid much cheering, that the growing thought in England was toward republicanism. Though he was content with the present political condition of affairs, the land should be for the people, in accordance with the constitution.

A Gloucestershire, England, nobleman is making a novel experiment to render land more remunerative. He has planted thirteen acres with gooseberry and currant trees, eleven acres with strawberry plants, and thirty-five acres with plum trees; while a large portion of park and wood of 200 acres have been converted into rabbit warrens, and surrounded with iron fencing.

From the day you slip a halter over a young horse's ears he should be encouraged to look to you like a child for all his little wants and simple pleasures. He should come canteering up from the farthest corner of the paddock when he hears your voice, should ask to have his nose rubbed, his head stroked, his neck patted, with those honest pleading looks which make the confidence of a dumb creature so touching.

The following statistics of the work of United States fishermen are taken from the report of a special agent of the fishery division of the United States Census Bureau, for the year 1879.—In the eight States bordering on the great northern lakes, including Pennsylvania, which has a comparatively limited lake frontage, there were 5,050 fishermen and 2,656 vessels, boats and steam tugs engaged in taking fish. The value of these vessels, etc., was $266,000, and the total value of all apparatus and accessories was $1,345,975. Of the eight States Michigan stands at the head as regards number of men, and Ohio in the value of investments, the latter being $233,000; the total fishing properties of the eight being valued at $497,400 in 1879. Michigan, notwithstanding the less value of her investments, stands far ahead in the value of fish taken. Of the total, which was $1,652,300, her share was $711,695; the next being Ohio, at $355,000.
