Let's Talk It Over

A Prince County Viewpoint

by "d"

How High Is Your B. Q.?

We all have to pay taxes. There is no choice in the matter. We contribute to the welfare and orderly working of the nation's, the province's, and the city, town or school district's business whether we like it or not. There is another kind of tax that is not compulsory. We pay, or not, as we please, and the degree to which we contribute is, in a sense, a measure of our sympathy with the great human heart that beats around us. We refer to the many charitable appeals that are made to us in the run of a year.

There are a lot of them, and sometimes they come when we are worried about our financial status, and feel that, as far as these voluntary contributions are concerned, we have reached the end of the line. We can sometimes manufacture a pretty good excuse to make our contributions small, and at the same time lull our warring consciences into an uneasy truce. It is so easy to stop giving before it begins to hurt.

We hear a lot of talk about a person's intelligence quotient, which we call his I. Q. We're pretty proud of a high I. Q. and if we have one, imagine we are the salt of the earth. But what of our benevolent quotient? Never heard of it? Well, you can figure it out by putting your total yearly contribution to welfare and charity appeals over your yearly income. It is a pretty good indication of what sort of person you are, and if you are really the salt of the earth.

Have you got it figured out? Pretty low, eh? Cheer up. You can start fattening your B. Q. today by giving generously to the Cancer Fund. It is very true, as the slogan goes, that the life you save may be your own. But as far as your B. Q. is concerned, it is more important to think that the life you save may be your neighbors.

Then at the next call on your charity, which is probably just around the corner, give a little more than you have become accustomed to giving. If we all do this, when we retire at night, we can cuddle up to our consciences and sleep the sleep of the high B. Q's.
