Hon. Paul Martin Praises Work Of Cancer Society

The following are excerpts from the address of Hon. Paul Martin, Minister of National Health and Welfare, at a recent meeting of the Ontario Division of the Canadian Cancer Society at Windsor, Ont.

Canada's recent and encouraging progress in the fight against cancer owes much to the Canadian Cancer Society and its provincial and local organizations. Anyone who looks back over the fourteen years since the establishment of the Canadian Cancer Society cannot fail to be struck by the steady growth of this organization and the increasing contribution it has made to Canada's cancer program.

That the Society now has an annual budget of some $1,500,000 is evidence of its vigour and of the need for the services it gives. Each year the Canadian Cancer Society appeals to the people of this country for voluntary donations to help finance its essential work. Out of these contributions, very generous support is given to the research program of the National Cancer Institute of Canada. A substantial portion is also set aside to provide for the Society's own program of fellowship. But the major activity of the Society is the promotion of its extensive educational program.

Already much effective work has been done by the Society to provide information to the public on the symptoms and treatment of cancer. The Society, which works closely with all other groups interested in the cancer problem, has persistently presented to the people of Canada the need for watchfulness and the necessity for early medical consultation whenever any suspicious symptoms appear.

The balanced presentation of the Society's educational work is admirable. It strives, on the other hand to stress the dangers of delay, needless modesty and carelessness. On the other hand, it tries to dispel the morbid fear which so often accompanies the appearance of a growth of any kind. The primary objective is to urge people to get advice early before their minds and bodies become tortured with uncertainty.

Science is doing its best to unlock the secrets of cancer, but even within the range of present knowledge and using present facilities, much can be done if doctor and patient co-operate in taking action at the first suspicion of the disease. My medical officers advise me that many forms of cancer are curable, and much suffering and heartache can be avoided if they are treated in their earliest stages.

Year by year, with greater public awareness of the problem, better diagnostic equipment and more trained workers, our chances of diagnosing cancer in the early and more manageable stages are steadily improving. Much of the hope for today's cancer sufferer is the direct result of the steadfast efforts of the Canadian Cancer Society to drive home to the general public the fact that cancer may be cured if it is treated soon enough. But in all our efforts to encourage the early diagnosis of cancer, we must have co-operation and teamwork between doctor and patient, specialist and general practitioner, province and province, and between governments and the voluntary organizations.

Hon. Paul Martin

The ultimate victory over cancer must be won in the laboratory, for the secrets of cancer are the secrets of the tissue-cell—the secrets of growth and life. The discovery of the cause and cure of cancer has become one of the greatest goals of government, of public spirited philanthropists, and of ordinary men and women who give what they can afford in support of annual appeals for funds such as that conducted with so much success each year by the Canadian Cancer Society.

Canada today is among the world's leaders in research into cancer. This was the judgment of two of Britain's leading cancer specialists, Sir Stanford Cade and Professor John Windeyer, now visiting Canada, and whom I met recently. As these distinguished scientists journey across Canada, I am sure they will be impressed with what they see. For today in hospitals, universities, clinics and laboratories, Canadian scientists are seeking answers to three vital questions: "What causes cancer?" "How can it be detected more readily?" and "How can cancerous growths be killed more effectively?"

But while we must wait on science for the final answer, we must not fail now to take the fullest advantage of present knowledge, skills and facilities in the detection and treatment of cancer. To conquer cancer, to find its cause, to protect its cure — is to free the vital spirit of millions of men and women the world over for a happier and fuller life. I am confident that in the joint endeavours of the world's scientists can find the final answer to this deadly peril to all the world's peoples.

Scout Affairs Discussed At Meeting Of Executive

A report on the Executive meeting of the Dominion Council, an interim report on Boy Scout Apple Day, and suggestions governing the selection of Scouts to attend the Canadian Jamboree next year were heard at a meeting of Executive and committee members of the Provincial Association yesterday.

Brigadier W. W. Reid, the President, presided and briefly summarized the business discussed at the Dominion Council meeting recently held in Winnipeg.

An interim report from three centres on Apple Day disclosed gross receipts to date of $1714.26. The centres reporting were, Charlottetown $1335.30; Borden $70.30; and Summerside $308.66. Apple Day will be held today at George town, Alberton and Tignish. Other centres to report are O'Leary, Airport, Kensington and Montague.

The Jamboree Committee, consisting of R. C. Parent (Chairman), J. S. Walker, F. A. Driscoll, W. B. LePage and E. G. Kerr, presented suggestions concerning the selection of the Island contingent to the Canadian Jamboree at Ottawa. The Island quota is 33 Scouts and three leaders.

Committee Report

The committee reported as follows: (a) One Scout of First Class grade or higher as a representative from each Troop on Prince Edward Island. (This will fill approximately twenty vacancies.)

(b) One Lone Scout of at least First Class grade.

(c) The balance of the Troop to be made up of applicants based on merit.

(d) Since several Scouts attending the 1949 Jamboree were under fourteen years of age, and since some of these are still in

Troops as Scouts, it is recommended that no Scout who attended this First Jamboree be eligible for the Second Canadian Jamboree.

Application for the leadership of the contingent will be placed with the Executive Committee of the Provincial Council. It is recommended that applicants should hold the Scout Wood Badge. It is proposed the Council finance the three selected. Concerning Scouts it is estimated that the cost per Scout will be approximately $75.00. The Committee has suggested the Council grant a minimum of $25.00 to each successful boy applicant.

It was also recommended that a three day pre-jamboree camp be held three days previous to the time the contingent leaves for Ottawa.

The committee also suggested the Scout display for the Jamboree be a "patrol bridge building relay" and that troops should concentrate on bridge building throughout this season.

A decision also took place on the selection of an Island Scout to attend the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II. It was decided to leave the matter in the hands of the Training Committee. Applications will be sought immediately.
