

Concert Review

Many of you missed a great live concert from Brett Ryan last Thursday, October 3 at the Barn. Ryan and his three-member back-up band played straightforward Canadian rock. The rhythm and vocals blended together nicely throughout the night. All the songs were pretty good, so I believe Brett Ryan has a future as a respected musician.

At the beginning of one song, the lighting toned down, and the band started to play a "desert-feeling" beat. Ryan was quiet as this "desert" beat went on, and suddenly, the music turned to pure rock when he began to play his guitar. Another highlight of the evening was a song in which Ryan said he dedicated to his "sweet" girlfriend called, "Shake Your Monkey". He did two remakes: Bob Dylan's "How Does It Feel?" (Ryan sounded like Dylan in this number.), and Van Morrison's "Brown-Eyed Girl" (this remake was a "crowd" pleaser, and I bet Ryan and his boys appreciated these two girls dancing to it).

If you would have gone, you would have seen Sean Mulbride of Haywire doing the drumming, and a Pather lounge staff member showing off a worm in the lounge that she fetched outside. Unfortunately, not many were there and gave Brett Ryan a chance to display his talent. I hope his second record is big and Ryan never comes to the Student Union to promote it.
