

How to Tell Good Oats.

Good oats are clean, hard, dry, sweet, heavy, plump, full of flour, and rattle like shot. They have a clean and almost metallic lustre. Each oat in a well-grown sample is nearly of the same size. There are but few small or imperfect grains. The hard pressure of the nail on an oat should leave little or no mark. The kernel when pressed between the teeth should clip rather than tear. The skin should be thin. The size of the kernel will be less in proportion than the skin is thick. The color of the oat is not very material, but white oats are generally thinner in the skin than black. Again, black oats will grow on inferior soils. Short, plump oats are preferable to large, long, grains. Bearded oats must have an excess of husk. Oats are not necessarily bad because they are thin-skinned or bearded; but they must contain a less amount of flour per bushel than thin-skinned oats without beards.

Peter the Great, on his first visit to Lapland, was much struck by the scariety of inhabitants, and remarked the fact to an aide de camp. That gentleman replied that Laps were a scatty race, and had but few inhabitants to the square mile. " Ah," replied the Czar, who was endeavoring to introduce guns along with other products of civilization into his dominions, " a sort of race with four laps to the mile, eh?" The aide de camp said nothing, but meditated dark schemes of rebellion and assassination.
