Engineers Stumble Upon Two Bio Students in Lab

-Locked Inside Since 1969

Two biology students of St. Dunstan's University were found in an obscure lab that had been sealed since 1969 when UPEI was first established. Two engineers stumbled upon this unnoticed lab in the newly renovated Main building. The engineers were searching for the rumoured wine cellar located in the basement, when they heard moans and scratching. Fearing that Marion Hallers may have beat them to the cellar, they tore through a sealed off wall in a rage only to discover two fermenting and molding bio students locked in an ancient lab. They had survived off the plants that had been growing from the petri dishes.
