the ignorant and prejudiced among the mob. We should more gladly witness some anxiety to lift the Island to a nearer level with the neighbouring Colonies, by a sedulous attention to her real wants, based upon a sound knowledge of the peculiarities of her position. There is, in the first place, a thorough reform necessary in the mode of administering law and equity from the Court of Chancery down to that of the Justice of the Peace. We have hitherto servilely copied the institutions of the Mother Country, or the neighbouring Colonies, instead of adopting methods more consonant to our population, situation and resources. We ought to have had long ere this, a good, sound and efficient system of Road-making, instead of the miserable, disjointed and inadequate method at present in use. The Island is by no means limited in extent, to think of having railroads or canals except over or through those short necks of land that connect the navigable waters of its North and South sides; but there is no reason why great trunk roads, reaching from Charlottetown to the utmost extremity of the East Point, and North and South Capes, by the levellest and nearest routes should not be projected. In coming lately from St. Eleanor's, we performed some part of the journey on foot, and our position as a pedestrian, gave us both time and opportunity to observe the face of the land, and, from the superficial view of it from different heights, it became evident to us that a line of road from Charlottetown to the rising village of Summerside might be obtained, which, if not altogether as level as is requisite for rail, would be sufficiently so for wheel-carriages; and which, if it did not materially shorten the distance—though we think that would follow—would render it so easy to the animals, that a stage might be put upon the line that would go and return on the same day. Such a road having at its Summerside terminus, a good Steam-ship plying between that place and Pictou, would be of incalculable advantage to that part of the Island, and would have a tendency to increase the number of passengers either on purposes of business or pleasure. We should here not be a survey immediately made of the most practicable route between the places before mentioned, and an estimate of the expense? We should at all events, be the better able to provide for its completion in time coming, if not now. There are various other matters of public moment, some more and others less pressing, to which it is our purpose to devote the greatest part of our attention during the coming winter. And we trust our readers will approve of the determination we have comb to, of letting party politics alone until a fitter opportunity of resuming the contest shall occur, more honorable to ourselves, worthier of our pen, and attended with greater advantages to them and the public in general, than this disgraceful sort of literary guerilla warfare, which, however pleasant it may be to others, is, we confess, uncongenial to our tastes and habits. Let it be fully understood, however, that we shall keep a watchful, vigilant surveillance up in all the measures of government, and shall not fail to apprise our readers, if we find any thing doing or contemplated, which we conceive inimical or injurious to their interests, or in the least degree unconstitutional. The present Administration have their four short years to run, and it will be seen at the end of that time, how they have discharged their trust, and redeemed their pledges; if well, we shall be agreeably disappointed, and if they shall have fallen short of the mark, we have not the slightest doubt, but that there will arise a third body, who, unconnected with either of the late parties, will take the field with purer motives, and make the love of power and of gold, give place to the love of Country.

(For Haszard's Gazette.)

THE CULTIVATION OF MUSIC.

I have often wondered why the people of Prince Edward Island exhibit so little taste for music compared with the Germans. We are sprung from the same stock, for Germany is also our "Vaterland"—not inferior in point of native intellect or mental cultivation, and surrounded with the same joyous and inspiring influences of sight and sound; yet, in music, comparing ourselves with them, we are little better than children. Whence arises this difference! No doubt, many sufficient reasons could be assigned for it. The fault must probably lies in our imperfect systems o education, which seldom comprehend a knowledge of the theory and practice of music. Throughout the greater part of Germany, music is recognized as a regular branch of education, and taught as such in almost every public school. At present, so far as practice is concerned, this divine art is almost wholly unknown to the great bulk of our labouring classes, although they are quite as susceptible of its charms as their wealthier brethren; while even so far as regards natural aptitude for acquiring a knowledge of heavenly harmony, our labourer classes are not a whit behind those above them in rank. I have known many a club of artisans who had so cultivated their musical talents as to have within their reach, at any moment, the most exquisite enjoyment. But as education is conducted at present, this can only happen where a strong bias towards the study of music enables the individual to surmount very obstacle. How much more widely diffused would such innocent and refined pleasures be, were children at school taught the gamut along with the alphabet and were Do, Re, Mi, made as familiar to them as A, B, C. Those who imagine that the cultivation of this part of our nature would necessarily lead to the neglect of something else of greater importance, only show how ignorant they are, not on y of the laws which govern our complex being, but also of all experience on the subject. No one will pretend to say that the Germans are inferior in any branch of education to the inhabitants of this country, although the teaching of music in their schools makes almost every person you meet a tolerable performer on some kind of instrument. Among a very numerous class in England, music is held to be at best but an agreeable pastime, worthy only of being cultivated by the necessary profession of the art, and of being enjoyed by the lighter portion of mankind.

It is to be hoped that those men who wish to extend the blessings of knowledge have a more liberal and enlightened notions of its importance as a branch of education. They must know that whatever tends to refine the taste of a people, will as certainly elevate the standard of moral principle which governs those men more agreeable, will also make them better a d that this may especially be said with regard to music, the most generally sympathetic of all the fine arts. MERCUS.

Our correspondent "Musicus," complains of the neglect of the study of music among the people of the Island, and with reason. We agree with him that the study and practice of the science of harmony has a tendency to soften down very many of the asperities that are to be met with in the way of life. The subject has of late met with great attention in the parent land, and the exertions of Hullah in providing music for the Million are still continued. We are glad to find that the congregation of St. Paul's Church, in this Town, are to be assisted in their devotions by the accompaniment of a new Organ. Music has in all ages, and among all nations, been the most considerable part of public worship, and whether vocal or instrumental, when offered to the Deity as a tribute of praise and thanksgiving, in the terms of the most trivial or simple song, or the vehicle of supplication and lamentation, in more solemn and subdued tones, there is no reason that we can imagine, why the offering should not be the most perfect that our powers are enabled to give. There is in human nature, a sympathy with sound, and the chords of the heart vibrate with those of the instrument when both are struck the same key: and there can be little doubt, but that the aspirations of the soul are assisted in "the swelling anthem's notes," by the dispason of a well-tuned instrument. In a climate such as ours, where the nights of winter are long, the practice of music would have a tendency to afford a method of spending a portion of them equally gratifying to the listener and performer. Every thing that has a tendency to make home more pleasant and agreeable, will always find support from us, and we know of few methods of spending an evening more agreeably, and attended with more delightful reminiscence, than a mixed party of young and old participating in the refined engagements afforded by the means of vocal and instrumental music.
