

MR. AND MRS. KEITH CHARLES STICKINGS

Pretty Afternoon Ceremony Unites Young Couple

Trinity United Church was the scene of a pretty wedding on September 19th at 2.00 p.m. when Joan Teresa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Smith of Charlottetown, became the bride of Keith Charles son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick N. Stickings of Summerside.

Rev. A. F. MacLean performed the double ring ceremony. Mr. Roy Mungford was organist and accompanied Miss Joyce MacCallum as she sang beautifully, "The Lord's Prayer" before the ceremony and "The Voice that Breathed O'er Eden" during the signing of the register.

The church was attractively decorated for the occasion with baskets of multicoloured gladioli and the guest pews with large, white satin bows.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in a floor length wedding gown of white tulle and lace. The fitted bodice featured a scoop neckline with long sleeves coming to a point over the hand. Delicate rose petals and seed pearls adorned the neckline and formed a pattern on her long continental train. Her elbow length veil of tulle net, embellished with tiny lace and seed pearl medallions was held in place by a smartly styled cap embellished with sequins and trimmed with pearls. She carried a long cascade of deep red roses. Her only jewellery was pearl earrings, a gift of the groom.

Miss Lona Scott, friend of the bride, was maid of honour. She wore a sky blue peau de soie street length dress. The fitted bodice of fine imported lace featured a scoop neckline and three-quarter length lace sleeves. Its princess-line dress has an empire band which forms a back bow with long flowing streamers. Her headdress was a matching band adorned by a large, flat bow, matching shoes and white gloves. She carried a nosegay of white and blue carnations with long white streamers.

Miss Barbara Cameron and Miss Barbara Cameron, friends of the bride, were bridesmaids. They wore identical gowns of gold peau de soie fashioned the same as the maid of honor's. Their

ELLEN'S DIARY

'Casting His Shadow Before' Old Man Winter On Way

From the north this morning, Winter's shade rode in on a break wind, bringing the first snow flurries to our valley. "It's snow, Dear" grandmother laughed in the yard to Alex. "Snow!" he repeated in amazement, catching his white in young mittened palms.

So desolate today the plowed fields appeared, the furrows marked with white edgings, the potato rows too, not so long since, melon and summer.

"Hurry—make haste now, you farmer—get your crops harvested and to shelter!" Winter's shadow said sternly. "Once October's days are spent, you will work on borrowed time. Days of grace this Fall? Maybe, but you never know. Look at the West with its thousands of acres, its millions of bushels of grain, its pastured herd—now snow-bound."

"It was chilly in the field," James said this evening. "At the same time, I can't recall working at the turnips with so much leafiness still on the trees about."

On the range of pasture, our cattle-kind sought their grazing in the lee of grove or woodland; in the piggeries the small ones slipped down from their nursing to euddle in a warming company in their strawly bed. The black cat strolled the paths comfortably however in his furry coat, and the odd ewe, strayed to home-fields, nibbled contentedly on their warm and woolly-white.

The knitting-yarn—the warm sheep's gray for the winter socks and mittens for the farmers and lads came today. A fetching skein of it on the table waits for us to take up the needles that have been laid aside since spring, to cast on stitches and belong with the spirit of the year. For now crickets have played last tunes, flowerings have almost all disappeared from the yards, branches bare, leaves rustle underfoot. And work-of-day over out about, we close doors against the night to enjoy again the evening-lights and the comfort of hearthfires within.

"How's Granddaddy?" Granddaughter questioned coming by this evening while he was still out at the choring. "Hadh't he a bit of a cold this morning?"

"It seems to have cleared away," he said.

"Then" she giggled infectious-ly "he's not so miserable as a few minutes ago: 'My, my, Mr. Smith' the old doctor at the hospital said 'what a pretty nurse! you have this morning!'"

"I had" noticed" the patient whispered languidly.

"Great Scott, Nurse!" the doctor bellowed, "I had no idea he was so sick. Arrange for an emergency-operation at once."

"Isn't that silly?" she laughed, "though it is funny too."

"Cold it was today with Winter casting his shadow before" to hasten the harvests to shelter.

Until tomorrow—Diary—Good-night.
