ELLEN'S DIARY

Lots Of Loveliness Along Road Of Life Is Missed

"Yes" a farmer, who came by to visit a while this afternoon, commented to James when the two talked shop. "I reckon I'll have to buy hay before the stabling is ended. Unless I be added 'the spring comes earlier than I expect it'."

"Candianers Day wasn't too encouraging, was it?" James queried.

"No indeed!" the visitor agreed. "There wasn't a brighter morning this year."

"How is your feed lasting?" James had inquired.

"It's half gone by this!" James inquired.

"Yes, and a bit more," James said.

"Mrs. Tom is going. It's odd too!" James smiled. "But when you think the spring is going to be a late one, it seems as though the feed goes faster."

"It has a nice smell. I set them. Oh, I may, if I'm careful, have enough to see me through, but..."

"It's just as well to have the little extra to come and go on, I always say. Then a man can sleep sound!" James said.

"Go much younger stuff yet!" the visitor questioned.

"Nothing but a few ewes. No lambs—nor do we want any!" They're to come now, I think, on pasture. And the little pigs will be too late."

"No young goats!" the other grinned.

"None yet!" James smiled.

Mick it away from home this evening, attending a meeting of the 441 Club. Developing his education along its several lines of learning, including the feeding and care of a young livestock. A call of a beef breed will be his subject in this work as he "learns to do by doing."

Granddaughter too is a member of the same, and also is continuing her sewing lessons in a garment club, in this, one of her younger years.

Light snow on our portion today, light as the summer's dandelion down which drifts by, but they're to come now, I think, on pasture. And the little pigs will be too late."

was as great amount of snow on it, but certainly to improve the weather there.

"The snowflake is passing! Hear it!" Scampie barked from the gateway watching its progress. "Yes, it passed, o.c.e., and it's coming by again."

"It just needs a wind now, Eileen, to stir up a storm!" James commented, coming in from his day's close. "It's like leathery snow that came."

However, the sleet is calm. There is a sleet, deep a n' wide on the fields where, pattered by the moonlight, the snow lies so white.
