Increased Output Possible For Hogs And Beef In N.S.

HALIFAX (CP) — Increased production of beef cattle and hogs is possible in Nova Scotia if a better grassland management program is instituted, says S. E. Lewis, deputy minister of agriculture.

Lying within the boundaries of the province are hundreds of thousands of acres of land which could be made good through farm management practices, he says. And on this could be grown "much of the crops to satisfy the feed requirements of an expanding livestock production."

Nova Scotia imports from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 worth of beef, pork and veal calves each year.

Mr. Lewis said 200,000 extra hogs, 50,000 extra head of beef cattle and 30,000 veal calves are needed annually to meet the domestic requirement.

"This additional production would mean millions of dollars to the agricultural economy. . . ."

FARMING AMONG BIGGEST

Nova Scotia agriculture pours about $16,000,000 into the province's economy each year, and is one of its largest single industries.

Mr. Lewis said in a press release Nova Scotia has the distinction of being known as one of the best grass - producing areas of the world.

"We have, in Nova Scotia, the potential for the production of grass and forage crops that would be the envy of livestock men everywhere in the world."

"But," he added, "this potential will not be fully realized until farmers . . . appreciate that a program of better grassland management must be instituted from one end of the province to the other."

Mr. Lewis said the increasing population of Nova Scotia (737,000 at last census from 642,000 10 years earlier) means that farmers and those engaged in the science of agriculture have "a real job confronting them, if they are to meet the demands which will be made upon their industry."

Complex U.S. Ruling Is Given On Union Dues For Politics

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court ruled Monday that a railroad worker cannot be forced to pay that portion of his union dues which might be used for political purposes.

Justice W. J. Brennan at the same time said unions should be left free to spend part of dues money collected from non-dissenters to support union political activities.

Brennan announced the court's ruling in a complex decision in litigation that has been going on for 10 years and which, he said, has not yet run its course.

Justice John M. Harlan wrote a separate decision dissenting in part and concurring in part with the ruling. Justice Arthur Goldberg disqualified himself.

The ruling affected specifically about 30 North Carolina employees of the Southern Railway. They have contended it would be illegal to force them to pay dues to unions when they opposed any use of such dues money by unions for political purposes.

SAYS RULINGS REQUIRED

Brennan suggested that the lower court order objectors, who proved their right to relief, be given a refund of dues in the same proporation that union political expenditures bear to total union expenditures. Further, the justice said, the union should be required to reduce future exactions from dissenting union members by the same proportion.

The case involved union shop agreements between the Southern Railway, on the one hand, and the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks and the Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen.

Thirty employees sued to prevent enforcement of the agreements to them. They said it would be illegal to force them to pay dues when they opposed use of dues money by unions for political purposes.

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Barring favorable action by an arbitrator, a 62-year-old Reading Railroad porter with an unblemished service record 13 years will lose his job soon because of an $8 bill for union dues.

Three years before retirement age, Casey Delatte, a freight handler before he became a porter, would lose about $30 of a $150 monthly pension he and his wife expect to receive. His take-home pay of $128.17 every two weeks would be stopped.

On Feb. 1, Delatte owed $8 in dues to the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks. Because the union said he did not pay up on time, he must be fired.

Delatte will be dropped from the Reading's payroll this summer unless an arbitrator waives a rule which says a member who fails to pay his dues within the time limits specified is automatically suspended.

On March 12, after a hearing, a Reading official ruled that Delatte had not paid his dues on time. This was upheld by the railroad's personnel director. Delatte's decision to fight the ruling has kept him on active status, however, pending a finding by an arbitrator. At his hearing Delatte said he thought his dues had been paid by a friend to whom he had given the money for that purpose.
