territory to give Italy access to the port. Presumably, the same objections will be raised against Tito's new move.

"The majority of the population of the port of Trieste is Italian. We know that we cannot get it. But we are firmly asking for zone A because that is our land, we have a right to it and we will not yield on that point."

In substance he was suggesting a division of zone A into two parts—one to include the port, the other the surrounding countryside made up chiefly of rocky, hilly farmlands and vineyards populated by settlers of Yugoslav-Slovene origin.

The entire free territory of Trieste comprises 285 square miles at the head of the Adriatic Sea, and has a population of 375,000.

without being questioned by authorities. Maj.-Gen. M. H. S. Penhale, named in the magazine article as one of four officers who interviewed Dupre after his return from France, said in Winnipeg he had "no recollection" of an interview.

The General, former officer commanding Western Army Command and now Winnipeg's chief of civil defence, said he had met Dupre in Calgary on several occasions at club meetings.

Mrs. Dupre said her husband first started telling the story to friends. It then spread to social gatherings and church groups. Dupre addressed many service club gatherings.

It was at one of these meetings in Toronto that the details came to the attention of Reader's Digest editors. Dupre was brought to the Digest offices in Pleasantville, N. Y., where he told his story.

Anonymous Tip In the published article, Dupre is said to have worked in France for the British intelligence during the Second World War and to have suffered Gestapo torture rather than disclose secrets of his work.

The story was broken by Doug Collins, 33-year-old reporter for the Calgary Herald who joined the newspaper in the summer of 1952. He had no previous newspaper ex-

Man Injured On Highway

A Dutch immigrant, who works for a farmer nearby, was injured last night in the Tea Hill district. Family birthday cards and greetings from his own small circle of young friends were sent on to Windsor Saturday. Among them was a telegram conveying the birthday greetings of the Church of Scotland.

Now that his birthday celebrations are over, the Prince will step into full boyhood, coming under the care of his first governess—Miss Katherine Peebles.

He will begin in earnest on his first lessons and gradually leave the nursery routine behind. Before him stretch several years of special tuition to fit him for future Royal duties.

Island Members

Continued from page 1 taxation is most clearly seen in Ottawa where there is a concentration of government buildings. Grants to Ottawa in lieu of taxation amount to about one and a quarter million dollars annually.

Island members are enjoying the benefits they are receiving from the Federal Government with those received or promised to other Atlantic Provinces. They are aware that Ottawa is spending many millions to aid the fishing industry in Newfoundland.

They agree that it is in the general interest that the old fashioned methods of Newfoundland should be upgraded to match those of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Corresponding Assistance At the same time, they feel that in all fairness, Prince Edward Island should receive some corresponding assistance to that being given the newest province. Newfoundland will shortly be getting heavy revenues from its iron ore, hydro power and pulpwood resources in the Labrador area.

No such resources exist in Prince Edward Island. The P. E. I. contingent is still hopeful that additional federal funds will be made available for ferry service connecting the Island with the mainland.

Plans for improvement of the existing service will be made both on the floor of the House and in personal talks with cabinet ministers, notably the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Finance.

Fellow members of Parliament will rely heavily on Senator Walter Jones for advice in their requests to the Federal Government, and also to head delegations on specific matters. Mr. Jones is an experienced negotiator and it is felt his presence could readily tip the scales in the Island's favor.

Tells Crowd

The communique said: "There was complete agreement on the vital importance of effective methods for joint defence, especially in the light of evidence of increasing technical capability of direct attack on both countries by weapons of great destructive power."

This was an obvious reference, also contained in the President's speech, to the Russian threat of air attack with atom or hydrogen bombs.

Discusses Trade OTTAWA, (CP)—President Eisenhower, completing a two-day state visit, expressed complete agreement with Canada on the need of expanding world trade to maintain strength against the Communist threat.

But he suggested free trade be allowed to grow through "economic evolution" rather than through some "hasty" government decisions which might cripple industries and agriculture.

Thus he virtually wrote off the possibility of the U.S. moving quickly to remove import barriers which Canada, British and other countries have criticized as blocking greater trade with the world's biggest market.

But Mr. Eisenhower offered a word of hope: the 17-man presidential committee studying U.S. foreign trade policy may lead to a policy "which can command the support of the American people which will be in the best interest of the U.S. and the free world."

experience. He started work on the story after receiving an anonymous tip. Collins worked with the British Intelligence Corps for nearly eight years. He was captured by the Germans at Dunkerque in 1940 but escaped back to Britain via the Balkans. He knew many persons in Britain's special operations executive—mentioned in Dupre's tales—but was not a member himself.

Will Open New Diamond Area In South Africa

By Ashley Hawkins JOHANNESBURG, South Africa. (Reuters)—South Africa's hard-living weather-beaten professional diamond diggers will have another chance to get rich quick next month, when the government opens a new 13-square-mile area for staking claims.

The ground, near Bloemhof, about 200 miles southwest of here, is in the heart of alluvial diamond country of the eastern Transvaal, and is officially considered "payable."

All the 3,000 registered diggers who can make it will be on hand Dec. 3 to draw lots for choice claims, each hoping to find another "Jonker" diamond, the giant egg-shaped stone which sold for $275,000 in 1934.

The old days of mad dashes across the veldt to the best claims, often accompanied by shooting and murder, are gone. Gone too are the days when all comers lined up for the starting signal, older or wealthier diggers employing swift runners to represent them.

Nowadays lots always are drawn for the order of "pegging" claims in the new grounds which are opened periodically by the government. Only professional, registered diggers are allowed.

Strictly On Foot But the diggers still have to peg their own claims on foot. The use of animal or mechanical transport is banned under the rigid South African diamond laws.

Each digger is allowed to stake out one claim 45 feet square, with an option on a maximum of three other claims after the first week. Not long ago the diggers used to live, sleep and eat on their diggings, always wary of "ponchers."

Now, however, government officials carefully safeguard each claim, and the diggers usually use selected camping sites, with running water and proper sanitation.

The thought of finding diamonds worth a king's ransom just under the surface still lures the thinking ranks of the professional diggers from all over the union. Most of those who struck it rich have quit, and many of those remaining are diehards just scratching a living.

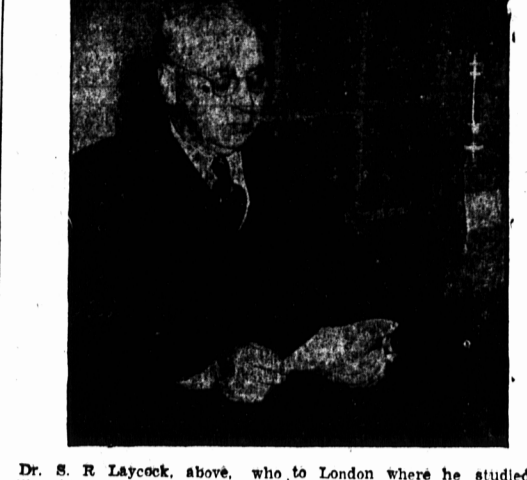

But while there's untold land in South Africa, the diggers will be there on opening day.
