That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

AN ATTACK OF CORONARY THROMBOSIS DOES NOT ALWAYS MEAN THE LIFE OF AN INVALID

For several years I was medical referee for an accident insurance company and so learned that it was an accepted policy of companies engaged in transportation to grant permanent disability pensions to employees (when this plan existed in the company). At the time I thought this plan of giving the employee who had had an attack of coronary thrombosis a pension for life was not always a wise one.

Of course, it removed fear from the man, fear of insecurity in that he would always have a living pension but, on the other hand, he would carry the fear of another heart stroke the rest of his life.

What about heart strokes? Should these men not be allowed to engage in some kind of work? And as far as it being safe for these men to drive buses carrying passengers, the records show that before the heart attack occurs the driver always has time to draw to the side of the road and thus prevent an accident.

In the correspondence department of the Journal of the American Medical Association, Dr. O. P. J. Fall of St. Louis University School of Medicine, states that his own personal experience is that the majority of patients recovering from their first attack of coronary thrombosis can return to an occupation not associated with undue physical strain or mental stress.

We have many cases among our records of men in all walks of life, including farmers, industrial workers, professional men and executives who are leading perfectly normal lives and experiencing no symptoms of difficulty. With any symptoms of difficulty we immediately advise cutting down on the work or stopping work altogether.

Dr. Falk points out, as a matter of fact, that coronary thrombosis takes place sometimes without the patient's knowledge or even that of the physician. The records of the St. Louis Public Service Company show that no serious accident has ever resulted from the employment of such persons, even with the sudden death of a bus or street car operator because they were always able to stop or draw up before losing consciousness.

However, there are certain exceptions to the above. When the heart attack is unusually severe or the patient greatly fears another attack or complications are present as shown by the electrocardiograph he should be pensioned off.

DOROTHY DIX'S COLUMN—

Neglected Stepchildren

Aunt Should Take Legal Steps To Insure Their Welfare

DEAR MISS DIX: Can you help me save two little girls from a permanently ruined life? My sister Ann is married and has two children by a previous marriage. She also has three children by her present marriage, but I am concerned with the older two girls. Ann's husband, Fred, is not fond of the youngsters, and they know it. Although he supports them, he denies them the love and understanding they need.

He drinks continually and has trouble keeping a job. The family is always in a turmoil because of his condition. In these drunken spells, and at other times too, he beats his wife and frightens the children.

He is one of the cruellest men I have ever met—the children as well as his wife. The girls have told me many times they have been whipped. They love their mother dearly, but beg me to get them away from their stepfather. They have pleaded with their mother to leave him, but in spite of everything she still loves her husband.

My husband and I love these two nieces and want to help them, but are at a loss what to do. They frequently stay with us and are very happy and contented then. Both girls have lost so much weight that they are pitiful. They are seldom dressed decently and their stepfather even resents their going to church. The children are 9 and 11.

Is there any way I could bring them into my home? I hate to hurt my sister but, since she wants to stay with such a man, I feel she has no right to jeopardize the welfare of her own children. They are likely to become juvenile problems if something isn't done for them soon.

ANSWER: While it is possible that your emotional upset over the hazards surrounding your nieces may have made your judgment too harsh, I am accepting it at its face value. The children are certainly in an atmosphere that is harmful to them physically, spiritually and morally. I have long since given up wondering why a mother exposes her children to such dangers for the sake of a drunken brute whom she believes she loves, but that is an insoluble issue. Since, however, Ann is so completely indifferent to the welfare of her daughters, someone else should take them in hand. If you are able, and willing, to give the children a good home and upbringing, there is a possibility that you could be appointed their guardian. Naturally, it must first be proven that the mother is unfit to keep them. Go to family court, where you can discuss the problem with trained workers who will give you proper assistance.

DEAR MISS DIX: About two years ago I began running around with women and drinking. Up until then my wife and I had lived almost four years of a happy married life. We have two children. My wife has finally filed suit for divorce, but I know now that I love her dearly and would do anything to win her back. She says she will give me one more chance. She has moved to another city and wants me to go there and try to win her back. I have stopped my bad habits and know they will not be resumed.

ANSWER: Your wife's suggestion is a very good one. Follow her to the city of her present residence, since it won't interfere with your work anyway, and begin your courtship all over again. It will take considerable effort to restore her faith in you, but surely it's worth anything you can do. You have hurt her most sorely, and are lucky that she is willing to give you another chance.

DEAR MISS DIX: Do you consider it improper for an engaged couple to go alone on one-day auto trips to neighboring cities? My parents won't permit me to go on such journeys, although all my friends have done so.

ANSWER: The propriety of an action often depends on the purpose behind it and the circumstances under which it is conducted. It's true that many engaged couples go on one-day outings, and conduct themselves so circumspectly that no criticism could possibly be passed. If you and your fiancé are people of that calibre, and your letter sounds as if you are, you should be permitted to take an occasional trip of this nature. However, if your mother will worry unnecessarily over it, better accede to her wishes. No pleasure is worth causing family concern.

How Can I!!!

By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I have whiter clothes when laundering?
A. Try slicing a lemon with the rind into the boiler of clothes. It will make the clothes beautifully white and remove stains from pocket handkerchiefs, underwear, and table linens.

Q. How can I make use of left-over bread?
A. Brown all left-over pieces of bread in the oven and then crush with a rolling pin. Keep these crumbs in a glass jar until needed.

Q. How can I clean cloudy bottles and cruets?
A. Pour pure household ammonia into them and shake vigorously. Rinse with boiling water.

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

"Another week of vacation gone!", Jamie remarked into the quiet of this evening. We had just returned from an outing to Alderlea and now as the dusk began to softly veil the farmlands about, were lingering out of doors loath to leave it even if to come indoors was to bring us to our rest.

Jamie was stretched full length on the grass of yard now spread with low sweet white clovers in a fetching design. Gage sat tailor-fashion beside piping at times on a broad blade of ribbon grass gathered from a clump nearby. "I never saw days go as fast as these," Jamie offered. Gage nodded. It is customary for him to agree with Jamie on most points. "It's mostly always like that when you have holidays. But sometimes," he said earnestly "when you're in school, well, you'd think the hands of the clock were stuck!"

Jamie, privileged among many lads of ten, was allowed to take an active part today nailing boards in place at the boarding-in ceremony on the shed-like extension to the barn at Alderlea. He enjoys his carpentry better than the weeding and so engaged never seems to weary nor is he ever distracted no matter the sounds of play from the other children about.

With young escorts we must come to see the progress of that work—ready now for the shingling; we must visit and admire the kittens and look in upon the leafy retreat in the flower border where in a briery spot a young turkey has chosen to nest. Other nests about, we must view, intriguing adobe ones built high along rafters, and one beloved of the children set cozily beneath a board in the paddock. . . . Petunias were scenting the lawn; lilies and pink "pinney-roses" are in bloom in our memory garden; and there at our window in a summer lullaby we heard again the gentle dropping of water through the sluice-gates on the dam.

"This week gave us much 'to have and to hold.' We remember now the teasing fragrance of strawberry preserve, holding as it does every delight of season in its ruby depths, to cheer and warm and brighten a cold bleak day of winter. We remember too that we were overtaken by another anniversary of birth on a recent and lovely morning. And this is your birthday, Ellen!" Jamie said before setting foot to the floor. . . . and the air that stirred the curtains was fresh and cool from the dew-fall and the day beautiful with promise. And with inherent feminine vanity which is natural to our sex, girl or mistress of heaven that it is, we queried: "You don't think I look forty, do you James?" "Not now, Ellen," he chuckled, "but you used to!" Nevertheless, we say with Edna Jacques: "Now that I'm forty . . . I can look back

Over the sweep of that old beaten track Laugh at old failures (such tragedies then), Live the nice parts of it over again, Count up the blessings . . . the losses . . . the tears, Wine of the universe—salt of the years, Now that I'm forty . . . with life all ahead, Years to be thankful in, sheltered and fed, With courage and fortitude born of the fray, Life just beginning . . . dawn on the way; Glad for the years that have given me grace, To stand here today and look Life in the face."

Until Monday—Diary—Good-night. . . .

The Stars Say --

By Genevieve Kemble

For Tomorrow

A RATHER typical week end, minus any sort of unusual activity or excitement. Midsummer days move along in the groove, although there is one note of warning against over-doing in the way of rash or wild undertakings, excitement, unwise indulgences or over-taxing of energies or vitality. Be particularly calm and temperate in exciting circumstances. Keep cool in any danger or accident. Shun all carelessness.

For the Birthday

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a year of rather regular activities, with matters developing in conventional grooves and with usual tempo. There are many mediocre activities, with possibly an urge to get into wrangles and arguments. Keep calm and considerate in emergencies, such as fire, accident or any over-activity. There is fair profit from right action or use of funds.

A child born on this day has versatility and fine prospects, although it might profit from discipline as to rash or impulsive activity or squandering of vital energy.

Day After Tomorrow

The horoscope holds augury of a particularly exciting day, but one of unusual and unlooked-for happenings. While the original ideas and plans may seem to be alluring, promising enjoyment and fulfilled hopes and desires, it is possible that some sudden turn of events may disrupt these plans, and culminate in disappointment, postponement or frustration. It could be the health of the family or of some elderly person. Meet such with patience and optimism. Don't be erratic, temperamental.

If It Is Your Birthday

Those whose birthday it is may look for a lively and enterprising year, with much stirring, but perhaps not in the direction originally planned. Sudden events may show the wisdom of rearranged plans and the application of fresh ideas, should new factors make change advisable. Some obstacle might arise, perhaps an illness. In the long run, a temporary upset might eventually bring lasting benefits, or some solid objective. Be patient, but plan for a lasting program.

A child born on this day may have original talents, hopes and aspirations, with much promise of long-range success, although it may have its share of setbacks and tests.

Morning Smile

Quick Thinking

A film director had been on location for two weeks and in the course of making the picture had fallen head over heels for the leading lady. Upon his return rumours of the affair reached his wife.

On the night of his homecoming they retired. The director dropped off to sleep and in no time was talking in his slumbers: "Darling, you know I love you. You're the sweetest thing in the world. There's no woman could mean so much to me."

Suddenly he awakened, glanced at the fire in his wife's eyes and sensed the situation. In a wink he turned over, pretended he was asleep and remarked, "Cut! Now bring in the horses."

Modern Etiquette

Q. Is it proper for a divorcee, marrying a man who has never been previously married, to wear a bridal dress and veil?

A. This is out of the question on any but a maiden bride. The divorcee may
