New Telephone Centre Opened in Newfoundland

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — The first stage toward provision of a $9,000,000 television microwave link between St. John's and Sydney, N.S., ultimately to become part of a coast-to-coast TV hook-up, was completed Thursday with the opening here of a new Canadian National Telegraphs communication centre.

The official opening was carried out at a switch-flipping ceremony by Sir Leonard Outerbridge, lieutenant-governor of Newfoundland.

The new centre, costing $1,500,000, also will handle telegraph, telephone and radio communication between Newfoundland and the other Canadian provinces as well as with the rest of the world.

The microwave link will be completed in 1958 and, with towers as high as 220 feet, will bridge the St. John's-Sydney gap to complete the CBC's hook-up from Victoria, B.C.

At the opening ceremony Sir Leonard said that Newfoundlanders, by virtue of their livelihood and antecedents, well know the difficulties, dangers and loneliness of isolation.

The facilities provided by the new centre would be capable of bringing to almost every family no matter how remote its location on the island—all the advantages of world-wide communication.

John R. White of Toronto, CNT general manager, spoke of the strides the company has made in modernization and expansion of its telegraph, telephone and radi facilities. Further extensions and innovations were planned for the near future.

Attorney-General L. R. Curtis of Newfoundland, who represented Premier Smallwood, congratulated the CNT on successful efforts in its efforts to serve the province.
