that the dinner this year, with few exceptions, will be attended by freshmen and sophomores, the majority of whom will be in the Arts program. This is not representative of the university faculties and it is not giving credit where credit is due." Do you realize that, out of the University's total enrollment of 1478 students, 1002 are in the faculty of Arts? Why then, shouldn't the Arts students form the majority at the dinner, since they are clearly the majority at the university?

Also, (perhaps I am oversensitive), but I detected a hit of condescension in the mention of Arts freshmen and sophomores. The first years in any faculty are not as easy as some like to think. - And Arts is a respectable a faculty as any. (While we're on the subject, I would hereby denounce any and all who ridicule the Arts program; it gives one a much better liberal education than any faculty. - and I invite any arguments on this statement!)

Anyway, I would simply like to defend all of those who received an invitation to the dinner, for they certainly deserved recognition. I agree with the senior in question that it is indeed unfortunate that the cutbacks were made. I would even go as far as to suggest that the event does not qualify for the title "Dean's Dinner", as it does not include all those on the Dean's list. (Call it the "Food for favored few" or "Hoedown for 100")

But, seriously, to say that the invitations do not give "credit where credit is due"? Really, that is going too far.

Dear Editor,

This is just a note of appreciation both the the authors and to your newspaper for the excellent and thought provoking article on abortion which was featured in last week's issue of the SUN.

How can any compassionate human being even consider the injustice of the seal hunt and remain aloof from the ceaseless slaughter of human infants?

It is time for each of us to set his priorities in order and to take a stand on the real dilemmas that confront contemporary society. Let us not pretend to show our charity and concern by feigning to be appalled at such a comparatively insignificant issue as the seal hunt. Save our energies for demonstrations and appeals against the deadliest atrocity we are faced with today - the murder of innocent unborn human beings!

Sincerely,
Keith Kennific

Dear Editor,

First of all I'd like to commend Marsha Gaudet and Valerie Moore regarding their excellent article on abortion. In view of 'the right for life' most university students must realize that abortion is the actual killing of somebody; that was conceived of man and woman, by the will of God thru the marvels of nature. The reason that this person was killed is because he/she was conceived out of lust and not love!

The solution to this murder would be not to conceive. Use of birth control devices; oral contraceptives such as the pill, prophylactics, and the IUD (which we found does not prevent conception, are necessary for those married couples who do not wish to raise more children than they can possibly manage to support. Or at least I would hope this is the case. (I might add here that most birth control devices are not 100% fool-proof and may have harmful side effects, oral contra-
