

quarter among the slaves. The first outbreak of this description will kindle a flame throughout the whole south, like the Grecian fire, which no water could quench. This will draw from the neighboring States something more efficient in warfare than sympathy and good wishes for the rebels: namely, men and munitions of war. Even now, although the sectional feelings of those States have not yet had time for their usual operation, there is not one of the States bordering on South Carolina, that will either raise a man for the subjugation of that State, or permit the passage of the United States troops through their territories for that purpose.

It is, indeed, a crisis in our history, at which the boldest may well tremble.

The Editor of the Richmond Whig has a strong article against the Proclamation of the President. After speaking of the "extraordinary assumptions" it contains, the Editor says,—"One thing is palpable. If they are legitimate, the memorable victory of 1801 was achieved in vain, and we are citizens, not of a confederacy of sovereign and independent States, but of a consolidated empire; free men so long and no longer, as our masters at Washington may permit us to remain so." Again with great force and truth:—"Another thing is equally apparent. The friends of State rights must make a last stand for their existence, or relinquish them forever, and sink, the helpless and passive slaves of federal power.—Now will be tested the sincerity of those professions, long and loud, which this State and its rulers have made, time after time, and year after year."

The following is from the Norwich Republican:—"As the case stands at present, not a single State in the Union upholds South Carolina in her measures of redress; or avowedly approves the course she has taken. But let an army march into South Carolina, and a burst of indignation will pour forth from the whole South—and in opposition to one State in an attitude of opposition to the General Government, there would be two and probably half a dozen.—They would say, if we were to be governed by swords and bayonets, instead of reason and compromise, on which the Union was originally based, the sooner we are out of it the better. Our turn may come next.

A distinguished member of the bar, in Savannah, writes thus to a friend in Charleston, in relation to the stand taken by South Carolina:—"Our people are coming over to her doctrines. Let but a drop of her blood be shed; Georgia will perish her all in defence of Free Trade and State Rights, and sink or swim with her Gallant Sister."

nation, in case of a war, to escape and lead their aid—have been confined, and are to undergo a Court Martial.

THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.—President Jacksons doubt whether or not the United States Bank was a safe depository for the funds of the Republic, seems from the following statement to be without foundation.

For notes in circulation,	$17,268,733 36
Deposits of all kinds,	14,580,520 30
The holders of funded } debt redeemable,	3,747,696 45

Making a total of 37,296,250 20
This is the full extent of the demands on the bank. Now, what is there to meet them?

1. Gold and silver	1,026,059 45
2. Funds in Europe, equivalent to, indeed better than gold & silver here,	2,885,010 26
4. Real Estate,	2,997,101 53
4. Due by State Banks,	3,512,953 24
Due by individuals,	52,172,734 79

Making an aggregate of 79,593,871 27
Here then are 79 millions to pay 37 millions! Really this would seem sufficient to quiet the fears of the most sensitive holder of a note.
