Dorothy Dix Says—

hard as it may be to face. Give up the notion that you are a romantic schoolgirl, which is the delusion under which you are laboring. You're a grown woman, a wife and mother.

Take a good look in the mirror! No matter how well preserved you are, 41 is 41 and not 21! It's a mighty nice age, too, if one lives up to it. With a good husband and a fine son, you have plenty to live for without resorting to sentimental day-dreaming to fill in your time.

YOU WANT LAST FLING

It's not uncommon for women of middle age, or approaching middle age, to decide that life has been devoid of romance. With this sense of futility comes an urge for one last fling at the moonlight and roses. You follow this pattern closely, even to the extent of seizing on a much younger boy as the object of your frustrated yearnings. I hope you follow it to the logical end and awaken from your dreams as readily as you slipped into them. Adopting the course you suggest, of surrendering husband, home and son for your foolish Romeo, would end in tragedy for all of you.

We are all accustomed to the discussions of the pernicious effect of movies, television, etc. on the very young. Some of this thought should be diverted to the effect these media have on the middle-aged. Too many women with time hanging heavy on their hands set up a mental and emotional stupor with an over-indulgence in sentimental stories, movies, soap operas and the like. At least some, if not all, of this time could be much better employed in activities benefiting not only the worker, but the community and church as well.

Get yourself into something of this sort! Your small household very evidently isn't enough to keep you busy. Put more effort into making a good home for your husband and son, and stop day-dreaming!

DEAR MISS DIX: I have been engaged since my eighteenth birthday last February to a very nice boy of 22. He is now in the Army and we are considering marriage on his first leave, which will be this fall. I feel confident that I have the qualifications for a soldier's wife, and while my father doesn't object to our marriage, my mother does. She thinks I'm too young. While we would like to marry soon, I don't want to hurt my mother and I do feel that our love for each other won't fade over a few more months' separation.

ANSWER: Delaying your marriage in consideration for your mother's concern is your best course. You are both very young, and postponing matrimony for a few months or a year will give you better preparation. Too many young people get carried away by the glamour of a quick wedding-on-leave with a serviceman, ignoring the resultant responsibilities. The young bride thereafter spends long, dateless evenings alone, under the added cloud of parental disapproval. The young husband has the added worry of a wife—and possibly a child—while already under the stress of service duties. Upon his return to civilian life he faces the problem of starting from scratch, in all probability with no job, to support a family. All these facts should be duly considered. Where both sets of parents approve the marriage, weddings of servicemen do not have so many complications, but under the unsatisfactory conditions you outline, postponement is the better
