Bureau Reports On Egg Production

More than 20,000,000 Canadian hens are laying to the tune of about 400,000,000 dozen - or close to 5,000,000,000 eggs a year. That adds up to around $100,000,000 annual take for the egg side of the poultry industry.

The Bureau of Statistics has just come out with figures to show the hens weren't laying as well in June as they were in the previous month, but still better than they did in June, 1951. Average production per hen in June this year was 15.5 eggs compared with 17.4 eggs in May and 15.1 eggs in June last year.

The bureau didn't give the reason but it probably was due to increasing summer heat. Hens don't lay so well when it's hot. That probably explains too, why hens in the more moderate climates of British Columbia and the Maritime Provinces have better production averages on the whole than in more extreme central Canada and the Prairies.

Hits Egg Consumer

When temperatures go up and egg production goes down, it hits the egg consumer in the pocket book. For instance, egg prices took a sharp drop around May, mainly because of a market glut, and sold at around 50 cents a dozen or less for Grade A large in eastern Canada.

Now with the onset of summer heat and consequent declining production, prices have climbed. Grade A large in most Eastern centres now are retailing at an average of about 75 cents a dozen.

But to get back to those statistics: Canadian egg farms and in the little back-yard hen runs produced an estimated 29,300,000 dozen in June this year, almost 7,000,000 less than the estimated May output of 36,200,000. The June, 1951, production figure was 26,400,000 dozen.

This brought total estimated egg production in Canada to 214,300,000 dozen for the six months of this year, more than 36,000,000 dozen above the output of 178,000,000 dozen in the first half of last year.

During June producers sold for market 23,200,000 dozen, valued at $6,700,000, compared with 28,500,000

Largest Producer

Ontario is Canada's largest egg producer. In June Ontario boasted 7,610,000 hens which laid an estimated 10,564,000 dozen eggs during the month, compared with 6,722,000 hens and 8,765,000 dozen eggs in June 1951. Next biggest egg producer is Quebec which had 3,591,000 hens in June, laying a total of 5,231,000 dozen eggs.

But Nova Scotia got the best June production out of its 893,000 hens which laid 1,523,000 dozen eggs, an average of 1.719 eggs per 100 hens. British Columbia was next with 1,466,000 hens laying 2,491,000 dozen eggs and averaging 1.712 eggs per 1000 hens.
