

Nuclear Guarantee Problem Seen Soon For Japan-India

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER
WASHINGTON (AP)—U.S. policy-makers soon must face up to the question of whether the United States should offer some non-nuclear countries—namely India and Japan—scientific protective guarantees against China's developing nuclear power.

The problem, officials say, is primarily one for President Johnson's committee on non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, headed by Roswell Gilpatric, former deputy defense secretary.

A major objective of any guarantee system would be to make it unnecessary for India, Japan or any other country which came under the U.S. nuclear umbrella to build its own nuclear force.

The Johnson administration already has given assurances both public and private to the governments in New Delhi and Tokyo; the question now is whether some permanent kind of nuclear shield should be provided.

The problem of how to provide assurances to India and Japan was posed within the U.S. government immediately after the Chinese tested their first A-bomb last October.

The complicated issues in working out any kind of non-guarantee system are understood to have been discussed informally with U.S. officials when Prime Minister Wilson of Britain and his top advisers held policy talks with Johnson and U.S. policy-makers here two weeks ago.

DILEMMA FOR WILSON
The situation apparently creates a trying dilemma for the Wilson government. The difficulty arises from the fact that Wilson went into office in October with a pledge to get rid of Britain's national nuclear force.

His effort to fulfill that promise has taken the form of a proposal to turn British without the capacity to produce a nuclear power outside the NATO area. Yet they have extensive defence commitments in the Middle East and Far East.

A radical new element was introduced into the Asian and Far Eastern power balance in October, about the time the Labor party took power in Britain, by China's test explosion.

Pearson And Diefenbaker Hurl Confucius Quotes

OTTAWA (CP)—Prime Minister Pearson and Opposition leader Diefenbaker hurled Confucius quotations at one another in the Commons last week in summing up their positions on a Conservative motion.

He who digs dirt loses ground, Mr. Pearson said. "He who hides wronging is a wrongdoer himself," Mr. Diefenbaker fired back.

The exchange came after Russell MacEwan (PC) Picou sought an emergency debate on "the grave doubts and uncertainties about the standard of conduct and public morality of those in authority in public affairs."

Mr. MacEwan said he referred particularly to the admissions of State Secretary Lamontagne and Immigration Minister Tremblay concerning "relations between themselves and the Seikind brothers of Montreal and companies associated with them."

TOLD OF PURCHASES
The two ministers had previously had reporters about the down-payment purchases of furniture from the now-bankrupt Montreal firms of Max and Adolph Seikind.

Speaker Alan Macnaughton told Mr. MacEwan's motion that after the two ministers had given statements on the purchases.

"These statements were substantially the same as those given previously to the press," though Mr. Lamontagne added: "If you ever buy furniture, pay cash."

He said: "If you buy on credit and if later the store goes bankrupt then you and your family will live through an unpleasant time, especially when you are making certain sacrifices to remain in public life."

Mr. MacEwan said it was to the credit of both ministers that they had made statements to the press. But his actions were "inconsistent with the proper conduct of ministers of the Crown."

ASKED TO STAND UP
Mr. Pearson said to Mr. Diefenbaker: "If you stand up and make a charge of wrongdoing and stand behind it."

He noted Mr. Diefenbaker when prime minister had told the Commons June 17, 1959, in a "Conservative MP's concern with a land expropriation case, which becomes a motion to bring forward such a motion without

SUPPORT PROMISED
The initial move was to give assurances through diplomatic channels and to make an explicit public statement. The statement was contained in a speech which Johnson gave in the latter part of October.

"Nations that do not seek national nuclear weapons," the president said, "can be assured that if they need our strong support against some threat of nuclear blackmail, then they will have it."

Such a presidential declaration, which a firm statement of policy, does not have the permanent binding effect of a formal treaty. But the negotiation and drafting of the treaty brings up a variety of complicated problems including the extent of defence commitments, their acceptability to foreign governments.

Mr. Lamontagne is said he waited two years before making payments on $6,000 worth of furniture because he could not afford them earlier.

He denied that the furniture was a gift from the Seikinds or that he obtained favors or contracts from the government.

He said he bought furniture in the spring of 1962 when he was May, 1962, to a relative who was sick and wanted to buy a house.

He bought more furniture in December, 1963. He now had paid back about half his debt to a bank collecting money owing to the bankrupt firms and was paying the balance on monthly terms.

ACTIVISE TWINNING
LONDON, Ont. (CP)—London several years ago agreed to "twin" with Quebec City, but the twinning has been more a matter of record than action. Board of control moved Wednesday to breathe some life into the partnership by suggesting that a committee, with representation from the chamber of commerce, city board of education and utilities commission, be established to think up some ways to make the twinning more vigorous.
