INDIAN MAGIC.

It Is Often Beyond the Power of the Wisest to Explain It.

One need not go to the realms of space, or time, or figures to meet with the incomprehensible. Despite modern science and ingenuity this word still remains the only applicable epithet for some of the achievements of Indian conjurers. We can smile at the luminous appearance of the beautiful face before which as the revelation of Osiris the old Egyptians prostrated themselves in awe—for the marvels of the magic lantern are familiar to us, the early existence of gunpowder gives an easy explanation of the oracle's lightning and thunder, the weird harmony of Memnon was merely the result of an ingenious mechanical contrivance—but shrewd travelers of later date, whose veracity is beyond dispute, tell of much more inexplicable things than these. One of the best known writers on occultism, Jacoliot, has left an account of certain things he saw during his official sojourn in India which, as they seem to defy explanation, may fairly be classed among things incomprehensible. The performer was one whom he accidentally met and who required some persuasion before he would exhibit feats which, he continually affirmed, were the work of other intelligences.

On some sticks fixed upright in flowerpots were placed some leaves from a tree, with holes in each sufficiently large to make them fall to the level of the mold. Standing at a considerable distance, the fakir made a gesture with his hands. A slight breeze seemed to pervade the room, then the leaves quivered and gradually worked upward on the sticks. Jacoliot placed himself between the flowerpots and the operator, placed the sticks in the flooring and adopted every means he could imagine to frustrate any trickery, but nothing he did made any difference to the movement of the leaves.

The more familiar feat of the seemingly supernatural growth of flowers was utterly eclipsed by another instance vouched for by the same narrator. His own servant brought him a score or so of seeds, from which he selected and marked one. The fakir planted it in a pot of earth, muttered some words over it and fell into a sort of trance, which lasted about 30 minutes. He then awoke, uncovered the pot and discovered a seedling two or three inches high. Jacoliot examined it and found it had sprung from the seed which he had marked.

With a touch of a peacock's feather the fakir depressed a balance of a common weighing machine in daily use in the household, though in the other was a weight of 12 stone, and with a distant motion of his hand he made shavings of wood to sink or move in water. Still more marvelous is the description of the manner in which this veritable eastern wizard was able to set at defiance the law of gravity. On this occasion, when leaving the room, he paused on the threshold, rolled his arms, and by a simple act of volition, raised himself from the floor and remained poised in air for some minutes.—London Standard.

TURGENEFF ABHORS SPORT.

How a Dying Pheasant Influenced His Whole Career.

The celebrated Russian novelist, Turgeneff, tells a most touching incident from his own life, which awakened in him sentiments that have colored all his writings with a deep and tender feeling.

When Turgeneff was a boy of 10, his father took him out one day bird shooting. As they tramped across the brown stubble a golden pheasant rose with a low whir from the ground at his feet, and with the joy of a sportsman throbbing his veins he raised his gun and fired, wild with excitement, when the creature fell fluttering at his side. Life was ebbing fast, but the instinct of the mother was stronger than death itself, and with a feeble flutter of her wings the mother bird reached the nest where her young brood were huddled, unconscious of danger. Then, with such a look of pleading and reproach that his heart stood still at the rain he had wrought, and never to his dying day did he forget the feeling of cruelty and guilt that came to him in that moment, the little brown head toppled over, and only the dead body of the mother shielded her nestlings.

"Father, father," he cried, "what have I done?" as he turned his horror-stricken face to his father. But not to his father's eye had this little tragedy been enacted, and he said: "Well done, my son. That was well done for your first shot. You will soon be a fine sportsman."

"Never, father, never again shall I destroy any living creature. If that is sport, I will have none of it. Life is more beautiful to me than death, and since I cannot give life I will not take it."—Atlanta Constitution.

An Arizona Rattler.

They say that a man takes his life in his hand who sleeps on the ground in Arizona," said a young civil engineer the other day, "because there are so many snakes there. But unfortunately men of our profession cannot always choose their sleeping place. I was working down there a little while ago with another fellow, and one night we were obliged to lie down upon no better bed than our overcoats stretched on the ground. We were too tired to be nervous and slept soundly till after midnight, when my companion sprang up suddenly, waking me with a start.

"What's the matter?" I asked sleepily.

"There's a rattler here." I listened and heard nothing. "I don't hear him," I said. "Guess you've had a nightmare." So we settled down again. In a few minutes my friend leaped to his feet once more, exclaiming:

"There's a rattler here, sure's fate, and you'd better get up. I believe he's under my coat."

It was queer that I couldn't hear it if it was so near. I cautiously extended my hand, feeling along the ground. Yes, I know, it was a foolish thing to do, but we don't always stop to think. Suddenly I burst out laughing.

"Yes," I said, "there is a rattler here, in your pocket too. You tell your sweetheart not to write you letters on such stiff paper."

We slept soundly for the rest of the night, but often since then I have gazed him about his "rattler."—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

Pat and the Bottle.

"Pat, where did you get the whisky?" asked one section hand of another.

"Whist!" said Pat. "O! swooped it from the private car dat was here."

"Pat, the brass collars are going to miss it by and by. You better hide it," said the first speaker.

"Let's take this hand car and run down the track a ways and bury it," said Pat.

The two got a hand car and told the foreman they were going down the track to get some potatoes for dinner. Away they went down the track about a mile.

"This is a good place," said Pat. The two got off the car and buried the bottle near the track.

"How will we know where we buried it?" said Pat.

"Cut a notch in the side of the car," said his companion. So a notch was cut in the side of the car above where the bottle was buried and the two carriers returned to their work. That evening they decided to go and dig up the bottle. Away they went.

"Where is the place?" asked Pat.

"I cut a notch in the car to show," said the other.

"And begorra I forgot all about it and moved the car," said Pat.—Topeka State Journal.
