Editors of other newsletters are welcome to reprint articles from the Island Naturalist (except when copyrighted). Acknowledgment would be appreciated.

THIS MONTHS COVER

Severe wind storms always have the potential to bring in some unexpected avian visitors. On November 1st, Rosemary Curley reported that Mary Beaton of Alexandra had reported Cattle Egret in their pasture after the wind storm. On November 2nd, Don Sands reported seeing 3 Cattle Egret at Cherry Valley.

The Cattle Egret is distinguished from the Snowy Egret and immature Little Blue Heron by its yellowish bill and from the Great Egret by its smaller size. This species has extended its breeding range to Maine and Southern Ontario since its invasion of the continent about 1952.
