The Transvaal War

Mr. Arthur Dillon writes from Jacob's Rest 50 miles from Bloemfontein, and says:

Since last writing you on Saturday we have had the hottest time we ever had since landing in South Africa. Paardeberg was nothing to it; and I would sooner face Paardeberg four times than what we had to face the last three days. In the three days we had about 12 or 13 casualties, two killed and the rest wounded, and about 12 missing. Sunday the enemy shelled our camp about five in the evening, and our guns went out to see what they could do and thus draw the fire from our camp. They located the guns, but the Boer guns outranged them and they had to retire for the night. The artillery had a few wounded. On Monday, 30th, our brigade moved out at 5 o'clock and about 7 we got extended. The Gordons and Canadians were given a row of kopjes to take, and off we started. When within about 2,000 yards of the kopjes the enemy opened fire with their rifles and we were ordered to lie down until the artillery shelled the hill. This they did to perfection. After they were in action about three-quarters of an hour the Boer guns opened fire in our rear and we at once saw our transport was in danger, so our guns faced our rear to protect them and at the same time an order was given for the transport to retire on the double to our left. Several shells landed among the waggons but did not explode, and a good job it was for our men they did not. Just as the transport started off a party of about 200 Boers came flying in the direction of it and we thought for a while it was all day with our transport. But our artillery got the range in about two shots and soon the Boers were retiring on the gallop. Then the Boers turned their attention to us and started their heavy guns in our direction. The first few shells we did not mind as they were not very close to us, but the next one impressed every Canadian as it landed right in our midst. We soon got the order to advance on the kopje and it was then we got it in real good style, every shell landing right in our lines. One of our boys, young Cotton, was blown to pieces. It was about the only shell that burst, and if it were not for the fact that they did not explode I am afraid there would be few left to tell the tale, for shells fell around every one of us and many of our boys were knocked off their feet. Some of the Island boys were knocked in the air about five feet, and we did not expect ever to see them again. But strange as it may seem none of them were hurt, and my statement can be backed up by every one who was present. Notwithstanding all the shell fire we were ordered to advance and charge and take the kopje. It seemed to me to be a hard order to advance on a kopje with the Boers on top and shells behind, but we set at our task with a will and after about three hours hard work we got to the top. We found that the Boers had just retired to another range of hills behind the first, so then we were on the top of a bleak hill surrounded on all sides. As long as we had the Gordons with us we felt safe.

We rested behind rocks while the officers held a council of war and came to the conclusion that as we would have to stay on the hill all night we had better advance a little closer and take up a safer position. So we fought our way about 500 yards further over and got a very good defensive position behind a ridge. Here we built little fortifications to protect us from being sniped at all night. The Boer guns had now ceased and with the exception of a rifle shot now and then all was as quiet as death and so we commenced to view the position very solemnly. Here we were on a hill and our blankets and overcoats were miles away with our transport. You can imagine how we felt; but we had to make the best of it and keep on the watch all night for fear of a night attack. But it never came, and so we put in the whole cold night. I tell you it was cold; just like a November night at home; so you can best imagine what you would feel like yourself out on some high hill with only a suit of khaki on in a November night with nothing to eat since morning and no breakfast in sight and every moment expecting a shower of bullets.

We fully expected at break of day the Boers would shell the kopje. But, luckily for us, the Highland Brigade with the same old talked-of naval guns arrived about 5 in the morning and took up a position to protect us on the kopje, and as soon as the Boer gun opened fire our Ocean Cavalry, as we call the sailors, soon silenced the Boer guns that drove terror into us. They will never be heard of again, for later on in the day the mounted men captured some of their guns and in the meantime we rushed to the hill and carried the position. Now things commenced to look a lot brighter for us for although they had heavier artillery we carried the day.

Soon after we rushed the hill, we heard the glad news that our food was on the way up the hill. Soon it arrived and I can tell you man and officer did not use many knives or forks eating it. We were just like hungry beasts. There was also an issue of rum to knock the shivers out of us. Soon after noon we retired from the hill leaving only a few men on picket and started to find our transport which we did very soon, and after marching a few miles camped for the night, had a good square meal, and lay down in a comfortable bed to lull ourselves asleep with the thought that we were still alive, having experienced one of the worst nights our men had. We were soon all fast asleep dreaming of our own Canadian homes. Today we are getting a long earned rest.
