A Flucky Girl.

MISS HORTON RESCUES SEVERAL GIRLS AND THEN FLEES.

Miss Carrie Horton, book-keeper and head clerk for the Stuyvesant Press Company, New York, heard someone in the street calling for help. She paid no attention to it but went on with her work.

When she reached the fire escape opposite the second floor Miss Horton saw that there was no way of getting down to the street. The long iron ladder which was supposed to be used in reaching the street hung upon the fire escape opposite the third floor.

By this time the flames were rolling out of the front of the building, climbing up the woodwork dangerously near the fire escape. The smoke almost enveloped the girls.

When she reached the fire escape opposite the second floor Miss Horton saw that there was no way of getting down to the street. The long iron ladder which was supposed to be used in reaching the street hung upon the fire escape opposite the third floor.

The heavy ladder moved upward a few inches and the hooks cleared. Miss Horton was holding the ladder by the middle rounds. As she tried to lower it the top swung out from the fire escape, and it seemed as though it would fall.

A dozen men grasped the lower end of the ladder, and Miss Horton came down they lifted her from the ladder.

A late San Francisco despatch says: "A beautiful young woman with her maid and an unusual quantity of baggage arrived at the Palace Hotel here about three weeks ago and engaged a suite of rooms."

She was beautifully provided with money, which she seemed disposed to spend lavishly. Miss Dora Vesta Hastings was the name she registered, but she told the clerk confidentially that she was the Viscountess Vesta, D'ce de Henriot, and that she was the widow of her cousin, a Russian nobleman.

Her reason for assuming the name of Hastings, she said, was because she wanted to avoid society, of which she was heartily tired.

She displayed great fondness for diamonds and black pearls, of which she had a choice collection. To a reporter who called on her upon being informed of her reputed rank she admitted that she was engaged to be married to John Bradbury, a wealthy Los Angeles youth.

As the news of her presence in this city spread, the gilded youth paid homage to her, and many racy stories are told of midnight suppers and "slumming" excursions. She disappeared the day after the publication of a despatch from Los Angeles, in which Bradbury denied that he was engaged to her, and was next heard of in the city of Angeles.

A few days later she returned to the Palace Hotel and said she had been to see Bradbury, who had satisfactorily explained why he had denied their engagement.

She remained at the hotel several days and again disappeared, but this time she forgot to pay her bill, which amounted to over $200. Bills from various jewellers for diamonds and black pearls began to pour in, but the fair one had made no arrangement for their liquidation.

came in the guise of a suitor, who revealed to San Francisco Club associates that she reputed Slavic countess was none other than a figurante of the New York Tenderloin District, and had for a brief season tried to be a soubrette in Nat Goodwin's company. The newspapers got wind of these revelations, hence the disappearance of Vesta.

Vesta Dore Hastings is well remembered in New York by those who used to see her almost daily taking a Broadway promenade, as a tall, scrawny young woman, with lots of chic and decided taste in dressing.

Her toilets were wonderful creations of pink one day, pale blue the next, then black for a week or two, when again she would blossom out in yellow or some other bright color. Her hair was the sunburnt reddish color suggestive of peroxide of hydrogen.

Until last October she resided at the Dure Flats, No. 151 West Thirty fifth street, and although she presumably lived alone on the "second floor, west," she had four servants, a cook, a parlor girl, a special maid and a woman of all work to run errands.

Tradition has it that she was born in California of humble parents, who failed on County Clara, Ireland, and she had made conquest of one of the nobility in London, and directed him to sell out her flat, which was done and $3,000 was realized for it.

Vesta Hastings went abroad last year, and wrote the caretaker of her flat that she had made conquest of one of the nobility in London, and directed him to sell out her flat, which was done and $3,000 was realized for it.

There are men in New York who claim that Vesta did not hesitate at levying blackmail. She is about thirty-five years old, and those who know her say she ran away from home when a girl in her teens.

Whether you drive a single horse or a team the principles are the same, but in driving a pair see to it that each horse does his share of the work, and no more. A pair of horses, moreover, unless well driven, are sure to get in the habit of wandering over the road.

To drive well you must keep your eye and your mind on the horse. Watch his ears. They will be pricked forward when he is about to shy, droop when he is tired, fly back just before he "breaks" (into a gallop), and before he kicks. Before kicking, too, a horse usually tucks in his tail, and hunches his back a little. When you observe any of these indications, speak to him sharply, and pull up his head.

You must watch the road also. Turn out for stones, so that the horse shall not stumble nor the wheels jolt over them; avoid the mud holes, and places where the going is bad; let the horse slacken speed when the road becomes heavy, and if you want to make up time, do it where the ground slightly descends.

It is a common mistake to think that a horse can haul a carriage easily on the level. On such a road he has to be pulling every moment; there is no rest. Whereas, when the road now rises, and now falls, the weight is taken off him at times, and he has a chance to recover his wind and to rest his muscles.

As between a level road in a valley and an up-and-down road over the hills, the latter is by far the easier for a horse to travel. When you come to a long level stretch let your horse walk a bit in the middle of it.

Almost everybody knows that for the first few miles, after coming out of the stable, a horse should be driven slowly, and especially if he has just been fed. On a journey it is of the utmost importance to observe this rule. Be careful, however, not to check a young nag too quickly when he comes fresh out of the stable; give him his head, talk to him soothingly, and presently he will come down to a moderate pace. If you pull him up at once you vex him extremely, so much so that he is not unlikely to kick.

Strong Nerves! A Healthy Body! A Clear Mind!

The Man who Possesses Such is Happy!

The business or professional man who has weak nerves, an unhealthy body, and a clouded mind and brain, has very little chance of success in life. He is handicapped when he attempts to compete with his healthy and vigorous neighbor.

As a rule we find that cure of humanity, dyspepsia, is the cause of most of the trouble. Dyspeptic men are constant grumblers—they are never of an amiable disposition. Some men are nervous, sleepless, bilious and rheumatic; such mortals have terrible weights to clog their onward progress in life.

There is hope and sweet comfort for all such individuals. We know of scores of men who have liberated themselves from bondage by the use of Paine's Celery Compound, that great and wonderful nerve-strengthening and flesh-builder. Weak nerves are made strong, the clouded mind and brain is made clear, and an abundance of bodily strength is given by that great specific, Paine's Celery Compound.

Try its effects, ye business men; a few bottles judiciously used will do more for you than hundreds of dollars spent with the doctor.
