

THE MILLER'S DAUGHTER.

'Here,' she said, reaching him an axe which lay in the corner of the room, 'this will wrench it open at once, and while you are trying it up, I shall just step to my apartment, and get a few things ready for our flight, as well as my own little saving for the last five years.'

The ruffian was thrown off his guard by her openness and anxiety to accompany him. Like all egotists, he deceived himself, when self-deceits was most certain to be his destruction.

'Go, lass,' was all he said, 'but be not long. This job will be done in a twinkling.'

She disappeared at the words. He immediately broke open the chest, and was soon engaged in rummaging its contents.

As he was thus employed, however, absorbed in the contemplation of his prey, and eagerly occupied in securing it on his person, the brave-hearted girl stole down stairs on tip toe. Creeping softly along the passage, she speedily gained the door of the chamber unseen by him, and likewise unheard. It was but the work of a moment for her to turn the key in the wards and lock him in. This done, she rushed to the outer door of the mill and gave the alarm. 'Fly! fly to father! fly for your life! Tell him we shall all be murdered unless he not haste back! Fly, fly!'

The child, who was at play before the door, at once obeyed the command of the brave girl, and sped as fast as his tiny legs could carry on the road, by which he knew his parents would return from church. Hannechen cheered him onward, and inspirited his little heart as he ran.

'Bless the boy! bless thee!' she exclaimed, in the gladness of her heart; 'an' master arrives in time, I will offer up a taper on the altar of our blessed Lady of the Kreuzberg by Bonn.'

She sat down on the stone bench by the mill door to ease her over-excited spirit, and she wept, as she sat, at the thoughts of her happy deliverance.

'Thank God,' she exclaimed, 'thank God for his escape. Oh! the deadly villain! and I am so fond of him, too.'

A shrill whistle from the grated window of the chamber in which she had shut up the ruffian Heinrich caught her ear, and made her start at once to her feet.

'Diether! Diether!' she heard him shout, 'catch the child, and come hither, I am fast. Come hither. Bring the boy here and kill the girl!'

She glanced hastily up at the case ment from which the imprisoned villain's hand beckoned to some one in the distance, and then looked anxiously after her infant emissary. The little emissary held on his way unarmed, however, and she thought to herself that the alarm was a false one, raised to excite her fear and overcome her resolution.

Just, however, as the child reached a hollow spot in the next field, the channel of a natural drain, then dry with the heat of summer, she saw another ruffian start up from the bed of the drain, and catching him in his arms, hastened towards the mill, in accordance with the directions of his accomplice. In a moment she perceived her danger, and in a moment more she formed her future plan of proceeding.

Retreating into the mill she doubled locked and bolted the door, the only apparent entrance to the edifice, every other obvious access to the interior being barred by strong gratings fixed against all the windows, and then took her post at an upper casement, determined to await patiently either her master's return and her consequent delivery from that dangerous position, or her own death if it were inevitable.

'Never,' said she to herself, 'never shall I leave my master's house a prey to such villains, or permit his property to be carried off before my eyes by them while I have strength to defend it.'

She had barely the time to secure herself within, when the ruffian without, holding the hapless child in one hand and a long sharp knife in the other, assailed the door with kicks, and curses and imprecations of the most dreadful character.

'Confound thee,' he said, applying the foulest epithets of which the free speaking Teutonic language are so copious, 'open the door or I'll break it in on ye.'

'If you can you may,' was all the noble girl replied. 'God is greater than you, and in Him I put my trust.'

'Cut the brat's throat!' roared the imprisoned ruffian above, that will bring her to her reason.'

Stouthearted as poor Hannechen was, she quailed at his cruel suggestion. For a moment her resolution wavered; but it was only for a moment. She saw that her own death was certain if she admitted the assailant, and she knew her master would be robbed. It was to risk all against nothing. Like a discreet girl, she consequently held fast in her resolve to abide as she was while life remained, or assistance reached her.
