FOUL PLAY.

By Charles Roade.

CHAPTER XLIX.

The 'Springbok' arrived in due course at longitude 103 deg. 30 min., but saw no island. This was dispiriting; but still Captain Moreland did not despair.

He asked General Rolleston to examine the writing carefully, and tell him was that Miss Rolleston's handwriting.

The General shook his head sorrowfully.
'No,' said he; 'it is nothing like my child's hand.'

'Why, all the better,' said Captain Moreland; 'the lady has got somebody about her who knows a thing or two. The man who could catch wild ducks and turn 'em into postmen could hit on the longitude somehow; and he doesn't pretend to be exact in the latitude.'

Upon this he ran northward 400 miles; which took him three days; for they stopped at night.

No island.
He then ran south 500 miles stopping at night.

No island.
Then he took the vessel zigzag.

Just before sunset, one lovely day, the man at the mast head sang out:
'On deck there!'

'Halloo!'
'Something in sight; on our weather-bow.'

'What is it?'
'Looks like a mast. No. Don't know what it is.'

'Point.'

The sailor pointed with his finger.

Captain Moreland ordered the ship's course to be altered accordingly. By this time General Rolleston was on deck. The ship ran two miles on the new course; and all this time the topman's glass was leveled, and the crew climbed about the rigging, all eyes and ears.

At last the clear hail came down.
'I can make it out now, sir.'

'What is it?'
'It is a palm-tree.'

The captain jumped on a gun, and waved his hat grandly, and instantly the vessel rang with a lusty cheer; and for once, sailors gabbled like washer-women.

They ran until they saw the island in the moonlight, and the giant palm, black, and sculptured out of the violet sky; then they set the lead going, and it warned them not to come too close. They anchored off the west coast.

At daybreak they moved slowly on, still sounding as they went; and rounding the west point, General Rolleston saw written on the guanoed rocks in large letters:
AN ENGLISH LADY WRECKED HERE. HASTE TO HER RESCUE.

He and Moreland shook hands; and how their eyes glistened!

Presently there was a stranger inscription still upon the rocks—a rough outline of the island on an enormous scale, showing the coast-line, the reefs, the shallow water and the deep water.

'Ease her! Stop her!'
The captain studied this original chart with his glass, and crept slowly on for the west passage.

But, warned by the soundings marked on the rock, he did not attempt to go through the passage, but came to an anchor, and lowered his boat.

The sailors were all on the qui vive to land, but the captain, to their infinite surprise, told them only three persons would land that morning—himself, his son, and General Rolleston.

The fact is, this honest captain had got a misgiving, founded on a general view of human nature. He expected to find the girl with two or three sailors, one of them united to her by some nautical ceremony, widely witnessed, but such a military officer of distinction could hardly be expected to approve. He got into the boat in a curious state of delight, dashed with uncomfortable suspense; and they rode gently for the west passage.

As for General Rolleston, now it was he needed all his fortitude. Suppose the lady was not Helen! After all, the chances were against her being there. Suppose she was dead and buried in that island!

Suppose that fatal disease, with which she had sailed, had been accelerated by hardships, and Providence permitted him only to receive her last sigh. All these misgivings crowded on him the moment he drew so near the object which had looked all brightness so long as it was unattainable. He sat pale and brave, in the boat; but his doubts and fears were greater than his hope.

They rounded Telegraph Point, and in a moment Paradise Bay burst on them, and Hazel's boat within a hundred yards of them. It was half-tide. They beached the boat, and General Rolleston landed. Captain Moreland grasped his hand and said "call us if it is all right."

General Rolleston returned the pressure of that honest hand, and marched up the beach just as if he was going into action.

He came to the boat. It had an awning over the stern, and was clearly used as a sleeping-place. A series of wooden pipes standing on uprights led from this up to the cliff. The pipes were in fact mere sections of the sago tree with the soft pith driven out. As this was manifestly a tube of communication, General Rolleston followed it until he came to a sort of verandah with a cave opening on it; he entered the cave and was dazzled at its most unexpected beauty. He seemed to be in a gigantic nautilus. Roof and sides and the very chimney were one blaze of mother-of-pearl. But, after the first start, brighter to him still was an old shawl he saw on a nail; for that showed it was a woman's abode. He tore down the old shawl and carried it to the light. He recognized it as Helen's. Her rugs were in a corner; he rushed in and felt them all over with trembling hands. They were still warm, though she had left her bed some time. He came out wild with joy, and shouted to Moreland, "She is alive!

She is alive! She is alive!" Then he fell on his knees and thanked God.

A cry came down to him from above; he looked up as he knelt, and there was a female figure dressed in white, stretching out its hands as if it would fly down to him. Its eyes gleamed; he knew them all that way off. He stretched out his hands as eloquently, and then he got up to meet her; but the stout soldier's limbs were stiffer than of old; and he got up so slowly, that, ere he could take a step, there came flying to him, with little screams and inarticulate cries, no living skeleton, nor consumptive young lady, but a grand creature, tanned here and there, rosy as the morn, and full of lusty vigor; a body all health, strength and beauty, a soul all love. She flung herself all over him in a moment, with cries of love unpeaked; and then it was, "Oh, my darling, my darling! Oh, my own, own! Ha, ha, ha, ha! Is it you? Is it you? Papa, papa!" then little convulsive hands patting him, and feeling his beard and shoulders; then a sudden hail of violent kisses on his head, his eyes, his arms, his hands, his knees. Then a stout soldier, broken down by this, and sobbing for joy. "Oh, my child! My flesh and blood! Oh, oh, oh!" Then all manhood melted away except paterity, and a father turned mother, and clinging, kissing, and rocking to and fro with his child, and both crying for joy as if their hearts would burst.

A sight for angels to look down at and rejoice, But what mortal pen could paint it?

IN BERMUDA.

Its Discovery and Past History.

Another Interesting Letter from Rev.
W. R. Frame.

My apology for sending you a short sketch of the "History of the Bermudas" is that previous to coming here I knew very little about them, and presume that this may still be the case with a few of your readers.

So far as published records show, the Bermudas were first discovered (or about the year 1515, (the exact date is uncertain) by Juan Bermudez, Commander of a Spanish merchant ship, when on a voyage from Spain to the Island of Cuba. The islands thus derived their name from the man who first discovered them.

The group was, in subsequent years, called "Somers Islands," after Admiral Sir George Somers, who lost his ship on them in 1609, when bound from England to the Colony of Virginia,—then by an easy and natural transition, and in allusion to the climate, they were also called "Summer Islands." The two latter names have long since been dropped and the Islands are now known only as the Bermudas or B. m. d. a.

It does not appear that Bermudez, on discovering these islands, took formal possession of them in the name of the King of Spain. It is indeed doubtful if he ever landed, though it is recorded that he intended exploring them, but in the meantime was driven out to sea by a severe storm.

Though he, no doubt, reported the discovery of the islands to his Royal Master, yet it is quite clear that the Spaniards made no move to settle them. The next we hear of the Bermudas is in 1543, when Philip II. of Spain made a grant of them to Fernand Camelo, a Portuguese, but what the terms were are not known.

Camelo seems to have made no further use of the royal gift than merely to visit the islands—take formal possession of them, and then suddenly depart. The only relics he appears to have left, were the initial
